These are all

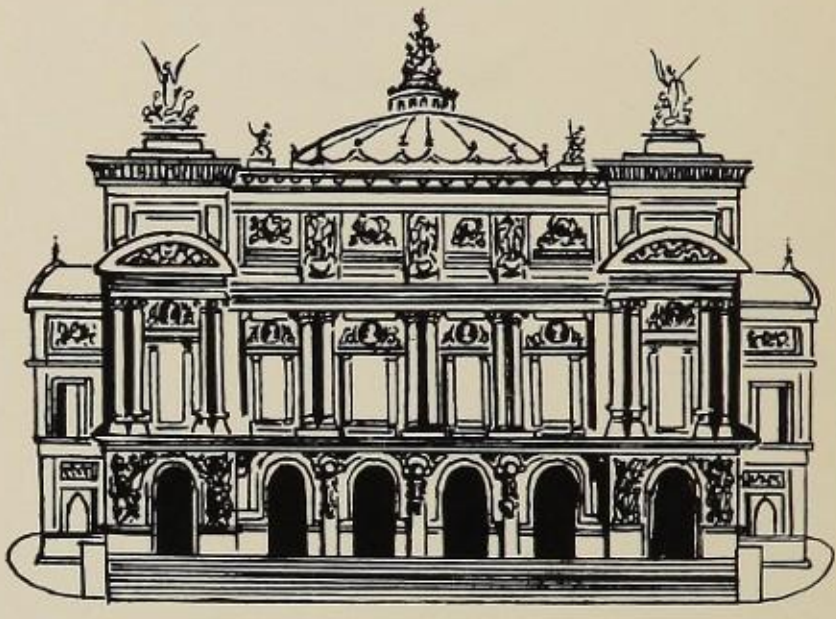
INTRODUCTION

This year Jamaica students were suddenly made aware of their building by a vast modernization project. Staircases and laboratories were closed for remodeling, and when the job was over, new bulletin boards, lunch counters and washrooms had been installed, twenty years' accumulation of bubble gum had been scraped from beneath the desks, and twenty years of history and gossip had been removed from the walls. The halls and classrooms now sparkle with a new coat of paint, and the laboratories have been brought up to date.

With all this attention being given to our building, we have begun to realize its importance and its versatility. For our building is really many buildings in one. It is a storehouse of knowledge. It is a workshop, turning out educated individuals. It is the clubhouse for dozens of extracurricular organizations. It is a library and a store, an office building and a cafeteria, a fieldhouse, a laboratory and a theater all under one roof. And it is our home for six hours a day, for four years of our lives.

Thinking of our building leads naturally to ideas associated with building. We find that this process is inseparable from life at Jamaica. Within our walls one can always find building going on. Students build furniture in the shop, or stage sets for a new production. In the gym students strive to build muscles, while in the tower they try to build up musical harmonies. On the second floor art classes build mobiles, and on the third floor electronics classes build radios. All classes involve building; we may even say that they are primarily concerned with building, for what activity has a better claim to the title of a building process than education, the building of the mind and character?

Yes, building is an integral part of our life at Jamaica; that is why we have chosen BUILDING as the theme of our yearbook.



BUT

to Jamaicans, the most important one is.

PRINCIPAL
JAMAICA HIGH SCHOOL

Dear 1958 Graduates:

Your Yearbook focuses on the theme of "Building." It is an ambiguous word, a word of many meanings and implications. Interpreted in the broadest sense, it is identical with the basic purpose of education. It is in school that you build the attitudes essential for good citizenship, the competence that makes it easier for you to earn your livelihood, and the social habits and emotional maturity that make possible a wholesome family life.

Every building must have a foundation. The higher you expect to build the structure, the deeper the foundation must go. The foundation for a good life can only be built by facing each day's problems realistically, with courage, with intelligence. Cultured tastes, intellectual depth, emotional sensitivity cannot be attained by purchase or by the receipt of a diploma. Cultured tastes grow out of study and experience; intellectual depth arises from sustained thought; emotional sensitivity develops from sympathetic relations with people and a positive outlook on life. Daydreaming, absorption in the air-castles of T.V., preoccupation with teenage fads are like building on sand for they do not provide a firm basis for success or happiness.

Some few of you may be shocked by the discovery, but most of you have already realized that education is a lifelong process, and that you have made only a beginning. We hope that in the years to come you will continue to build wisely and well. When you look back with nostalgia to the "good old days" of 1958, we think that you will see ever-deeper significance in Jamaica's motto, "Ad astra per aspera," and we trust that some of you at least will have attained "the stars."

To all of you we bid an affectionate farewell and extend our blessing.

SENIORS—Chairman Dr. Joseph Mersand leads this seventh term English honor class discussion about poetry. The class has also analyzed many essays.

WORLD DRAMA—Under the leadership of Mrs. Huber, the World Drama class has studied masterpieces from the ancient cultures to present day literature.

ENGLISH DEPARTMENT

THIRD TERM ENGLISH—Mr. Ryan conducts this sophomore class in its study of Homer's Odyssey. This epic poem is part of a study of Greek mythology.

JOURNALISM—Mr. Charles Steingart is teaching his class the fundamentals of newspaper work in preparation for a career on the Hilltopper.

PUBLIC SPEAKING—A would-be orator, Barry Tunick, makes use of numerous devices, logical and psychological, to persuade his audience that his is the best policy. Keen observer is Mrs. Rose Kirchman, who carefully guides the tyros in their attempts to become more dynamic speakers.

SPEECH CLINIC—The members shown are intent on mastering the sounds of English as they listen to the recordings of their own voices and speech patterns. Those students who can most benefit from clinical correction are chosen to participate in this worthwhile and enjoyable program.

STAGE SQUAD—This group, composed of Steve Jaffe, Steve Rosen, Eddie Boim, Gerry Marks, Hank Berg, the president, and Eric Teicholz, plays one of the most important roles in all school assemblies and dramatic presentations. Under Miss Saracco's able supervision they direct all backstage activity, including microphones, lighting, prop sets and general stage planning.

DRAMATICS—Mrs. Campbell with students Suzanne Ross and Fred Scheiner rehearse the class production of St. Joan. The production classes also study the history of drama.

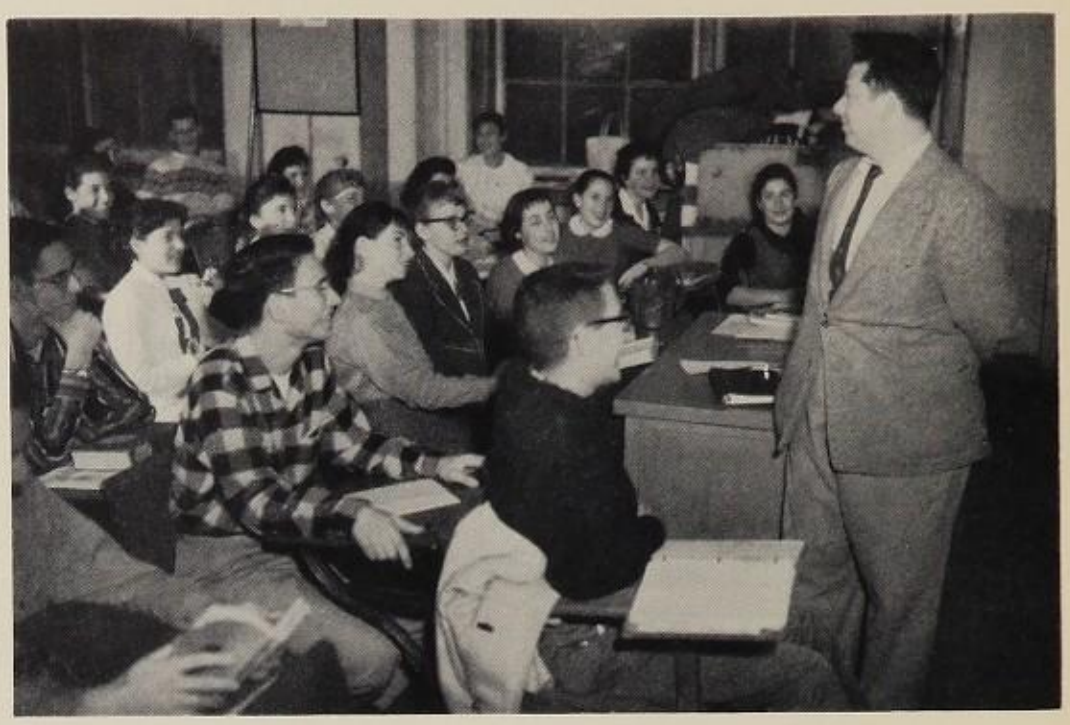
RADIO PLAY—Doug Gerstein stars in a radio class assembly comedy, My Client Curly, by N. Corwin and L. Fletcher, under the direction of Miss Mauro. These gifted students also write and present classroom plays during the year.

SPEECH DEPARTMENT

PUBLIC SPEAKING—This class, under the expert leadership of Miss Saracco, is discussing the principles of debate.

AMERICAN HISTORY—Mrs. Auerbach discusses sectionalism with Rita Schoenfeld as Rita Cohen looks on. Students taking this course learn the importance of various economic conditions in history.

ECONOMICS—Mrs. Stein instructs an economics honor class in stock market operations, after a visit to the Stock Exchange. Economics classes also study consumer problems, wages and living standards.



CORE HISTORY—Mr. R. Stern conducts the core class in American History. In order to enable the students to complete as much social studies as possible before they take the scholarship examinations, these students are tripling in social studies, with both a one-year American History course and a one-half year Economics course being taught to them in a single term.

CHAIRMAN—Mr. John Kunit watches as Linda Goldberg and Steve Cole locate a battlefield on the map. Chairman of the department for the last three terms, Mr. Kunit teaches a new course—Problems of Democracy—in addition to the American History class shown above.

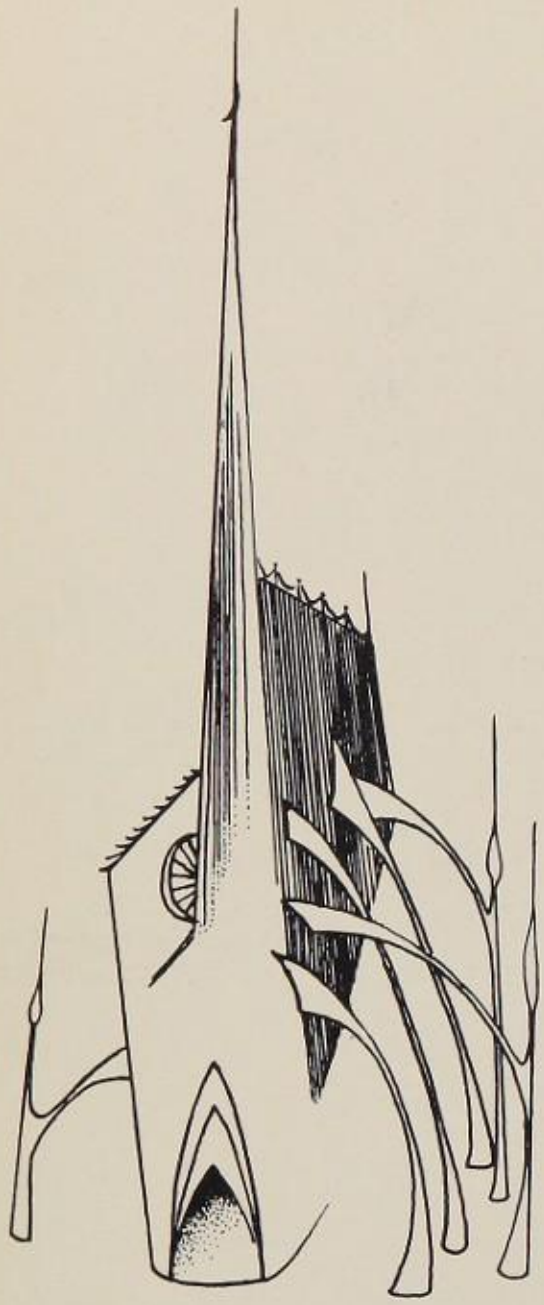
DEPARTMENT CONFERENCE—Members of the social studies department are, standing, (l. to r.): Mr. Kunit, chairman, Mr. Lasser, Mr. Lovely, Mr. Stern, Mr. Shargel, Mr. Feldman, Mr. Fahey, Mr. Neidich, Mr. Rose, Mr. Grehan, Mr. Katz, Mr. Younger. Seated: Mrs. Stein, Mr. Wright, Mrs. Gottlieb, Miss McBride, Mrs. Auerbach, Mr. Kahn and Mr. Kaufman.

SOCIAL STUDIES

SPECTATOR-ANALYST—Paul Galanty, Jack Muraskin, Alan Wolfson, Elihu Rose, Roberta Greenhauff, Judie Feigin edit the Spectator, a weekly news summary, and the Analyst, a semi-annual review. Mr. Kunit, history chairman, is their adviser.

PROBLEMS OF DEMOCRACY CLUB—Under the sponsorship of Mr. Kunit, discussions of current topics are held. Critical foreign policy analyses are featured.

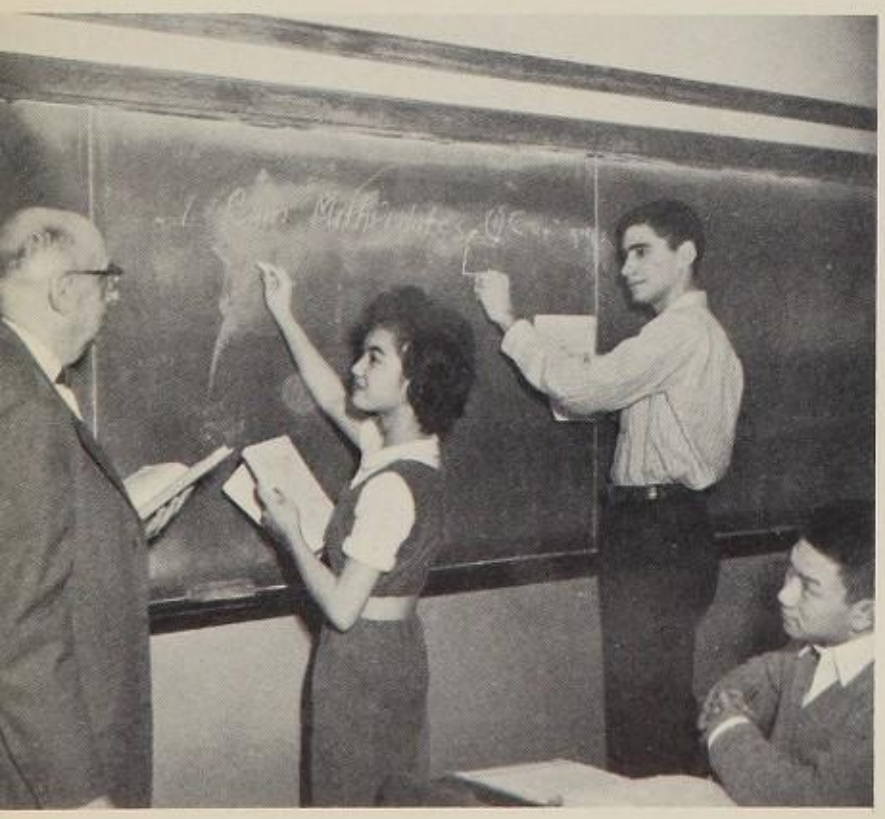
UN CLUB—The members of the UN club, under Mr. Kahn's leadership, analyze international problems. They suggest possible solutions for the problems.

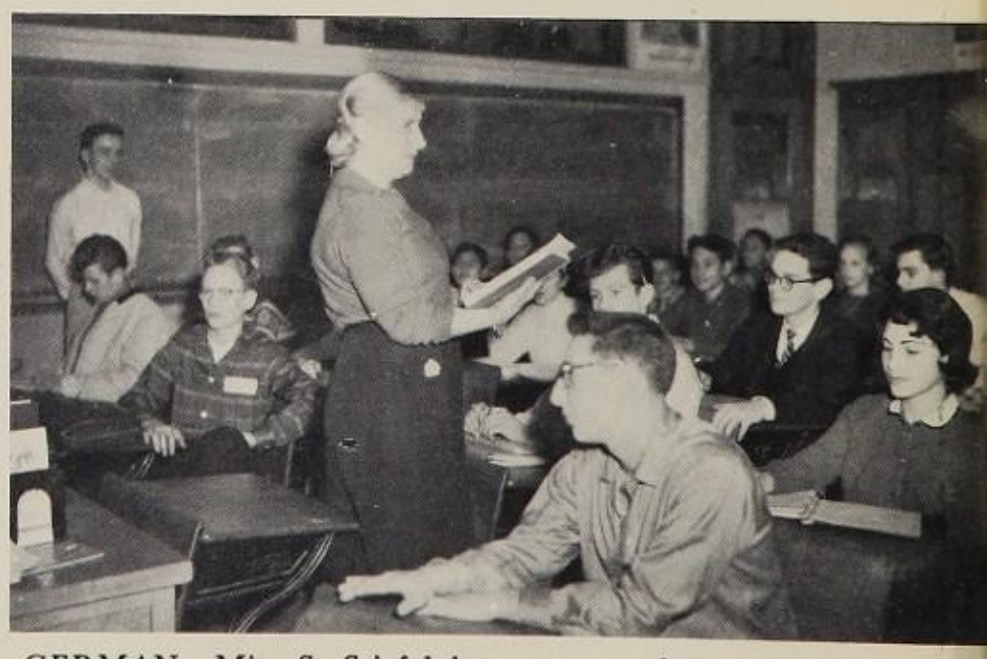


FRENCH CLUB—Under the guidance of Mr. Joseph Lundari, the group practices oral French, learns various aspects of French culture and hear guest speakers.

FOREIGN

LATIN—Mr. Philip Byck instructs (l. to r.) E. Cayco, P. Galanty and A. Chang, who are members of his third-year Latin class. The students direct their thoughts to the study of Cicero's orations and other Latin literature.





GERMAN—Miss S. Stiefel instructs members of a first year class. The first year is devoted to a study of grammar. Literature, conversation, and culture are also taught.

STAFF CONFERENCE—Standing (l. to r.) are: Mr. Tall, Mr. Karp, Mr. Heyman, Chairman Mr. Aaroni, Mr. Starfield, Mr. Lundari. Seated are: Mrs. Gurin, Mrs. Dubow and Mrs. Inker. Courses are offered in the languages French, Spanish, Hebrew, German and Latin. Each year the Foreign Language Department strives to develop increasing interest in the living art of language.

LANGUAGES

THIRD-YEAR HEBREW CLASS—Mr. Abraham Aaroni, the Foreign Language Department Chairman, leads a Hebrew grammar lesson. Jamaica now offers four years of the Hebrew language to its students.

SPANISH CLUB — La Sociedad Hispánica, under the direction of Mrs. Muriel Inker, held many interesting sessions. They dined at a restaurant featuring Spanish cuisine, attended a Spanish dance recital and printed a Spanish newspaper.

EARTH SCIENCE—Mrs. Catherine Ryan demonstrates river erosion by using the map. Robert Stoll and Gail Shemin study slides on this subject.

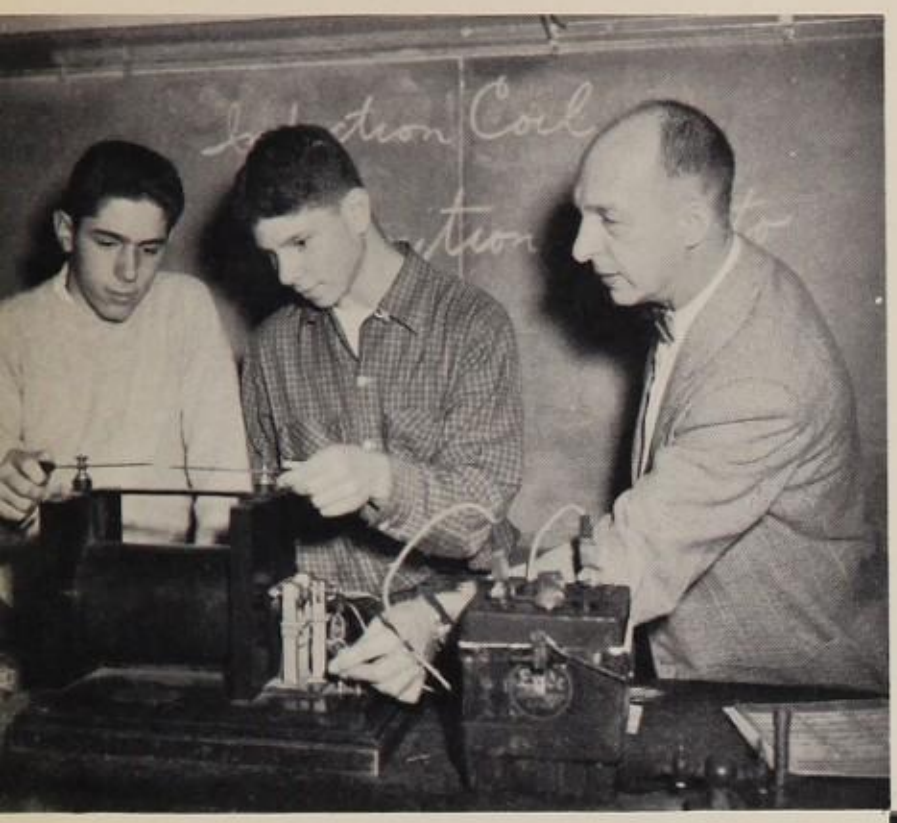
ELECTRONICS—Mr. William Naison explains the principles of the vacuum-tube voltmeter. He came from Bayside High to introduce the electronics course to our curriculum. In this course a student gains technological knowledge.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE



PHYSICS—Mr. Elmer Horst conducts an experiment with the induction coil. Michael Reiner (left) and Gerald Broakov help him and note changes.

CHEMISTRY—Miss M. Butler performs an experiment during the study of neutralization. Assisting are pupils James Schneider and Ingrid Kupprat.

SCIENCE-ENGINEERING CLUB — This group works to cultivate interest in science. With Mr. Feifer, club adviser, are Paula Meyer, Al Sommers, Richard Meglio, Arthur Sachs.

AQUARIUM CLUB—Each week students report on the progress they have made with their plants and fish. The club is directed by Mrs. M. Smith.

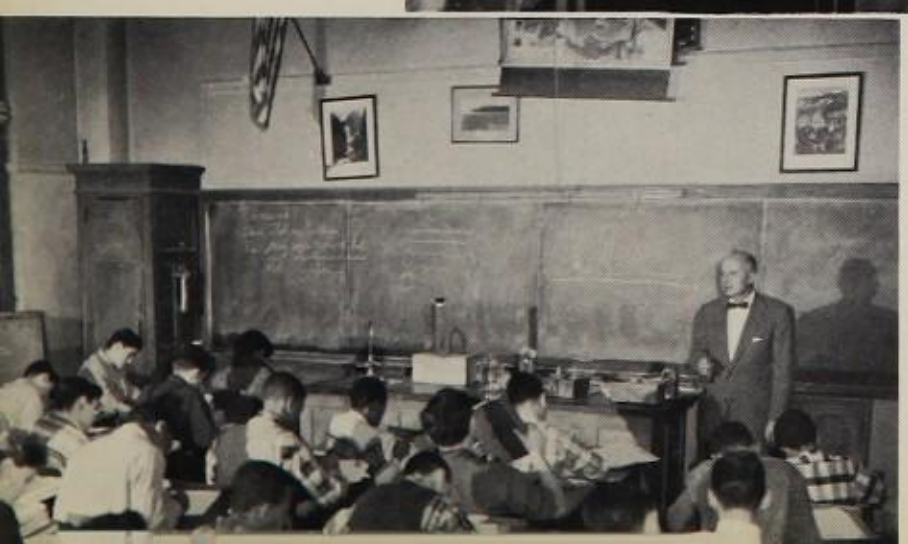
ADVANCED SCIENCE CLASS—A select group of juniors and sophomores is led by Mr. Herman Gillary, chairman of the Biology Department. These students have an opportunity to learn laboratory terms, and to prepare slides, use microscopes properly and dissect animals.

AGASSIZ SOCIETY—This club, named after Agassiz, the naturalist, is dedicated to seeking out the truth in science. Mr. I. Shaw supervises the society.

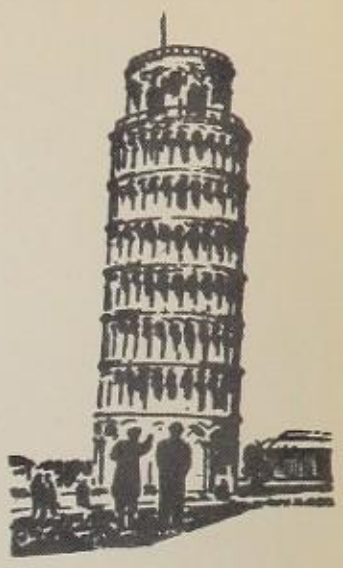
BIOLOGICAL SCIENCE

BIOLOGY LABORATORY—Mr. A. Lubell supervises the laboratory. He and his assistants prepare the exhibits used by the required science classes.

BIOLOGY SEMINAR—Mrs. Myrtle Blenderman and her biology class study the theories of the work of the leading scientists. They are also taught to seek the answers to questions puzzling them.



GENERAL SCIENCE—The group observes while Mr. Joseph Rubins conducts an experiment with photosynthesis.



DEPARTMENT CONFERENCE—Standing (l. to r.): Mr. Woodhouse, Chairman Mr. Gordon, Mr. Jahelka; seated are: Mrs. Tobias, Mrs. Schaefer, Miss Lawrence, Mrs. Jacobson and Mrs. Brancato. As a reward for their teaching effort, Jamaica's Math Department attained a high national ranking.

ADVANCED ALGEBRA—Mr. Louis Jahelka instructs this class in one of the three advanced subjects offered. The others are solid geometry and calculus. To increase interest in mathematics, the department also makes books available to students at reduced rates and issues an annual publication, The Radius.

MATH CLUB—Members of the Math Club demonstrate the amazing topological properties of a Mobius Strip. Topology is but one of the many topics studied and discussed with adviser Mrs. Tobias.

MATHEMATICS

MATH TEAM—Mr. David Gordon, Department Chairman, meets weekly with the trainees for the math team, some of whom will enter into competition on behalf of Jamaica when our school joins the Inter-Scholastic Mathematics League, probably in the fall of this year. Mr. Gordon, who is very well qualified for the position, won mathematics medals while at Brooklyn College.

ELEVENTH YEAR MATH—Miss T. Bay instructs Howard Weinberg and Madeline Winegar in this combined intermediate algebra and trigonometry course.

TENTH YEAR MATHEMATICS—Mr. Samuel Woodhouse instructs a class in a course combining plane geometry with trigonometry. This is an innovation in mathematics teaching in order to give needed background for advanced courses.

CHOIR—Featured at the Senior Music Assembly, Mrs. Gollobin's choir renders the traditional Bible response. In addition to this, they perform at the Christmas Show, the Arts Festival, and most of the other assembly programs throughout the year.

BAND—Jamaica's Senior Band, under the direction of Chairman Mr. Wilbur Hamje, learns important musical skills in preparation for both school and public performances.

HARMONY—Gathered around Mrs. Gertrude Lehrman are nine members of Jamaica's Harmony class, studying the basic ideas of playing, singing and composing musical pieces.

MUSIC

ORCHESTRA—Mr. David Katz gives the cue to the strings of the orchestra as other members wait to add their own harmonies at the proper time.

CHORUS—Sopranos, altos, tenors, and basses blend their harmonies during a session of one of Jamaica's many choruses. Coordination and expression are supplied by Mr. Bustin in preparation for the chorus' assembly performance.

PUBLICITY—Advertising posters are being printed for a school play by Mr. Isador Dinkin, Hank Berg, Mrs. Elaine Lipitz and Mr. William Kirk. Mr. Kirk, chairman of both the Art and the Industrial Arts Departments, has taught here for eight years.

ART DEPARTMENT

MECHANICAL DRAWING—Mr. Sidney Goldman is instructing his class as the future draftsmen learn some basic skills. The drawing of isometrics, orthographic projections and gears comprises only a small part of this varied course.

PUBLICITY—Hank Berg, adviser Mrs. Elaine Lipitz, Marilyn Swerdloff, Marina Valadoras, Kitsa Drakotos, Edward Geniti and Marjorie Walker design IND campaign posters.

ART APPRECIATION—Mrs. Jessie Fuchs is pictured showing paintings to her class. The course is required for two terms and consists of a study of design, form and color.

ELECTIVE ART—Miss Rosenblatt discusses a series of pictures with the class. The group receives instruction in the various media of art, such as pastel, water color and etching.

ART CLUB—Sketching a live model is but one of the many activities of this club. The adviser is Miss Miller.

DEPARTMENT CONFERENCE—Back row (l. to r.): Mr. Geller, Mr. Finck, Mr. Cohen; middle: Mr. Fuchs, Mr. Heller, Chairman Mr. M. Banner; front: Mrs. Crootof, Mr. Groveman, Mrs. Abrahams, Mrs. Karten. Business Machines has been included in the curriculum of the Accounting Department for the first time this year.

ACCOUNTING HONOR SOCIETY—Top row (l. to r.): Schnabel, Schneider, Fleicher, Fuchs, Furst, Stuken; middle row: Vereshio, Schneider, Goldblattt, Goffen, Hirschberg, Forst, Lasker; bottom row: Mandelker, Baxt, adviser Mr. Banner, Handler, Adler, Liotti, Schulman. Students who have a 90 average in accounting are eligible to become members. The Society's program includes field trips and tutoring.

MERCHANDISING—Mr. Irving Cohen lectures to his class about the many principles of salesmanship.

ACCOUNTING

ACCOUNTING—Mr. Reuben Heller, a new addition to the department, is the teacher of this accounting class. The students learn the skills of keeping and examining accounts. Excellent preparation is given for future entrance into the vast field of accounting.

MERCHANDISING—The teacher of this class, Mr. Jack Groveman, is a new member of the Accounting Department. Buying and selling are among the topics discussed by this merchandising class. A course in merchandising trains students for a future in the business world.

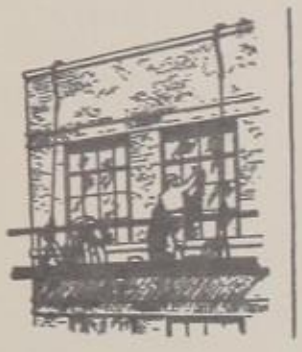
NUTRITION—Learning methods of preparing meals is one of the many things offered to Jamaica's girls in courses given by Mrs. M. McHugh who is the Chairman of the Home Economics Department.

HOME ECONOMICS

SEWING—Miss Marian Abrahams teaches her class about the mechanism of a sewing machine. The group uses the machine to make clothing.

SEWING CLUB—Mrs. Riva, head of the club, which is sponsored by the Home Economics Department, demonstrates the correct way in which one does fancy stitching by operating the sewing machine.

SHOP



CRAFT SHOP—Jeannette Birdsell, working on the potters' wheel, is completing a model which will go to the kiln for firing. Instructor Mr. Wolff looks on. Pottery and clay jewelry as well as jewelry in copper, metal enamels and sterling silver are taught in full or one-half credit craft courses.

MACHINE SHOP—Weldon Williams (left) and Earl Evans are shown the use of the tailstock chuck by teacher, Mr. Schussel. The course includes work in- bench metal, machine shop, forge and foundry.

WOOD SHOP—Howard Kinderman, supervised by Mr. Hagmeyer, rips wood on a circular bench saw. With lathe, power saw, drill press and jig saw, useful articles such as tables and bookends are made. Planes, hammers, saws and other manual equipment are also used.

TRACK—Norman Glickman, John Balser, David Laird, Roger Juris and Jeffrey Jakob sprint around the track. In order to offer a well-rounded program every year in such sports as baseball, track, soccer and handball, classes meet outdoors during the warmer months. In colder weather boys have an opportunity to take swimming at least once a week if they wish to do so.

HEALTH EDUCATION

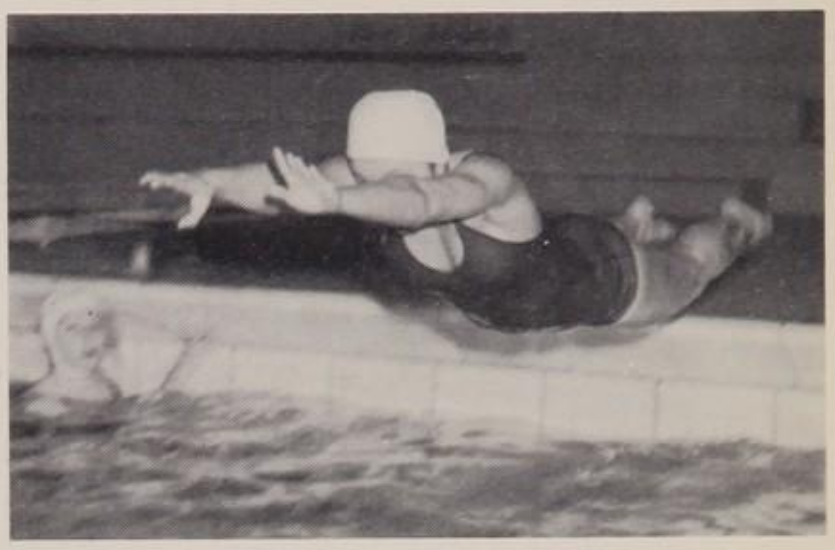
HYGIENE—Mr. George Baron instructs a boys' hygiene class in First Aid. All boys are required to take hygiene, and those who master certain basic skills receive the Red Cross First Aid Certificate. Mr. Baron, who is now our soccer team's coach, was an outstanding athlete at CCNY, where he was an All-American Lacross player.

SKETBALL—One of the many indoor sports taken by boys ring the year is basketball. Others given as part of the health ucation program are tumbling, volleyball and football. Boys rning PSAL awards must master basketball shooting and cern other skills.

BOYS' HEALTH EDUCATION—Members of the faculty are, standing, Messrs. Finkelstein, Piacentino, Schiffman, Halperin, Kendall. Seated: Messrs. Cairnes, Finn, Baron and Rubin.

VOLLEYBALL—Mrs. Siegel instructs a class in the skills of volleyball. Through practice, the girls gain skill in the game. The Health Education Department includes in its program other sports, such as basketball and tennis.

DANCE—Girls practice a gavotte.



SWIMMING—This diving form belongs to one of many girls who swim in Jamaica's pool. In order to graduate, every girl must pass a swimming test. The teaching chores are handled by Mrs. McVey, aided by the Swimming Assistants.

TYPING—Students combine swiftness with accuracy to achieve errorless typing while Mrs. Bardwell looks on. The qualities that are essential for a good typist are a light touch, curled fingers, an erect head and good posture.

DEPARTMENT CONFERENCE—The faculty of the Secretarial Studies Department, shown at one of their conferences, is (l. to r.): Mrs. Agin, Miss Shannon, Mrs. Tracy, Mrs. Bakst, Miss O'Donoghue, Mrs. McNelis and Chairman Mr. E. Roth. The Department now offers four terms of sten and typing, with transcription in the second year, and two terms of secretarial practices.

TIRONIAN HONOR SOCIETY—This group consists of honor students in Secretarial Studies. Mrs. Charlotte Chickering supervises the activities of the Society. One activity is the issuance of the department's magazine, The Tironian. The Society's name refers to Tyro, a scribe of Cicero, who is the symbol of secretarial alacrity. Suzanne Ross is the club's president.

SECRETARIAL STUDIES

STENOGRAPHY—Mrs. E. Bakst corrects a student's error, helping her to become more proficient in Pitman shorthand. Students may take either the one year or the two year course given in this subject.

CHAIRMAN—Mr. Ernest Roth shown giving dictation to his class in stenography. Under his direction the department has introduced an accelerated one-year stenography course for academic students.

LIBRARY — Supervised by Mrs. Greene, Mr. Coburn and Mrs. Watts, Jamaica's library is a place where students can read or do research.

Broadhurst, Carton, Schlessinger, Walker, Hurwitz, Houlebreque, Atkins, and Kaplan. The girls have the opportunity to teach swimming classes. They also have speed races against each other. In the past the girls have put on excellent water ballets. The newly chartered organization's faculty adviser is Mrs. McVey.

OFFICERS—The elected leaders of Swimming Assistants are shown with the organization's faculty adviser. They are (l. to r.): Barbara Levine, Marilyn Radow, adviser Mrs. Alice McVey, Ellen Zackin, Louise Parker and Helen Graf.

STUDENT COUNCIL—It is the responsibility of this organization to coordinate the many student activities in Jamaica and to provide for the general welfare of the students. Officers are elected each term at the culmination of campaigns which include rallies.

STUDENT COUNCIL

REPRESENTATIVE ASSEMBLY—G.O. business is transacted at monthly meetings of enrolling room representatives.

BEAUTIFYING JAMAICA—Our G.O. adviser, Mr. Rose, is glancing at Jamaica's new "Summa Cum Laude" board. Like our Honor Roll board and display cases, the General Organization purchased it.

K-9 CLUB—One of the club's many guest speakers is observed by President Ken Wildman and Ed Geniti. K-9 Club is sponsored by Mrs. Theresa Carlucci.

FUTURE TEACHERS CLUB—Under the guidance of Miss Ruth Scriebman, the girls prepare themselves for meeting teachers' college requirements and study teaching methods and child psychology. Led by Janet Kenler, president, and Reeva Chernin, vice-president, they also debate various phases of pedagogy.

GUITAR CLUB—The new club, directed by Mr. Starfield and Mrs. Atlas, teaches novice guitarists. Although international folk music is played, Spanish songs are stressed in the repertoire.

CLUBS

NEWMAN CLUB—This social and religious organization is led by Miss Abrahams and officers Ed Geniti, Rosalie Lassen, Jeff Maloney, Elsie Cayco.

FUTURE NURSES CLUB—Under the leadership of Mrs. Marie McHugh and Ellen Shapiro, club president, these girls plan for careers in nursing.

JR. RED CROSS CLUB—The club, headed by Mrs. Cagan, holds an annual fund raising drive. They make tray mats and stuffed animals for distribution to several hospitals and orphanages.

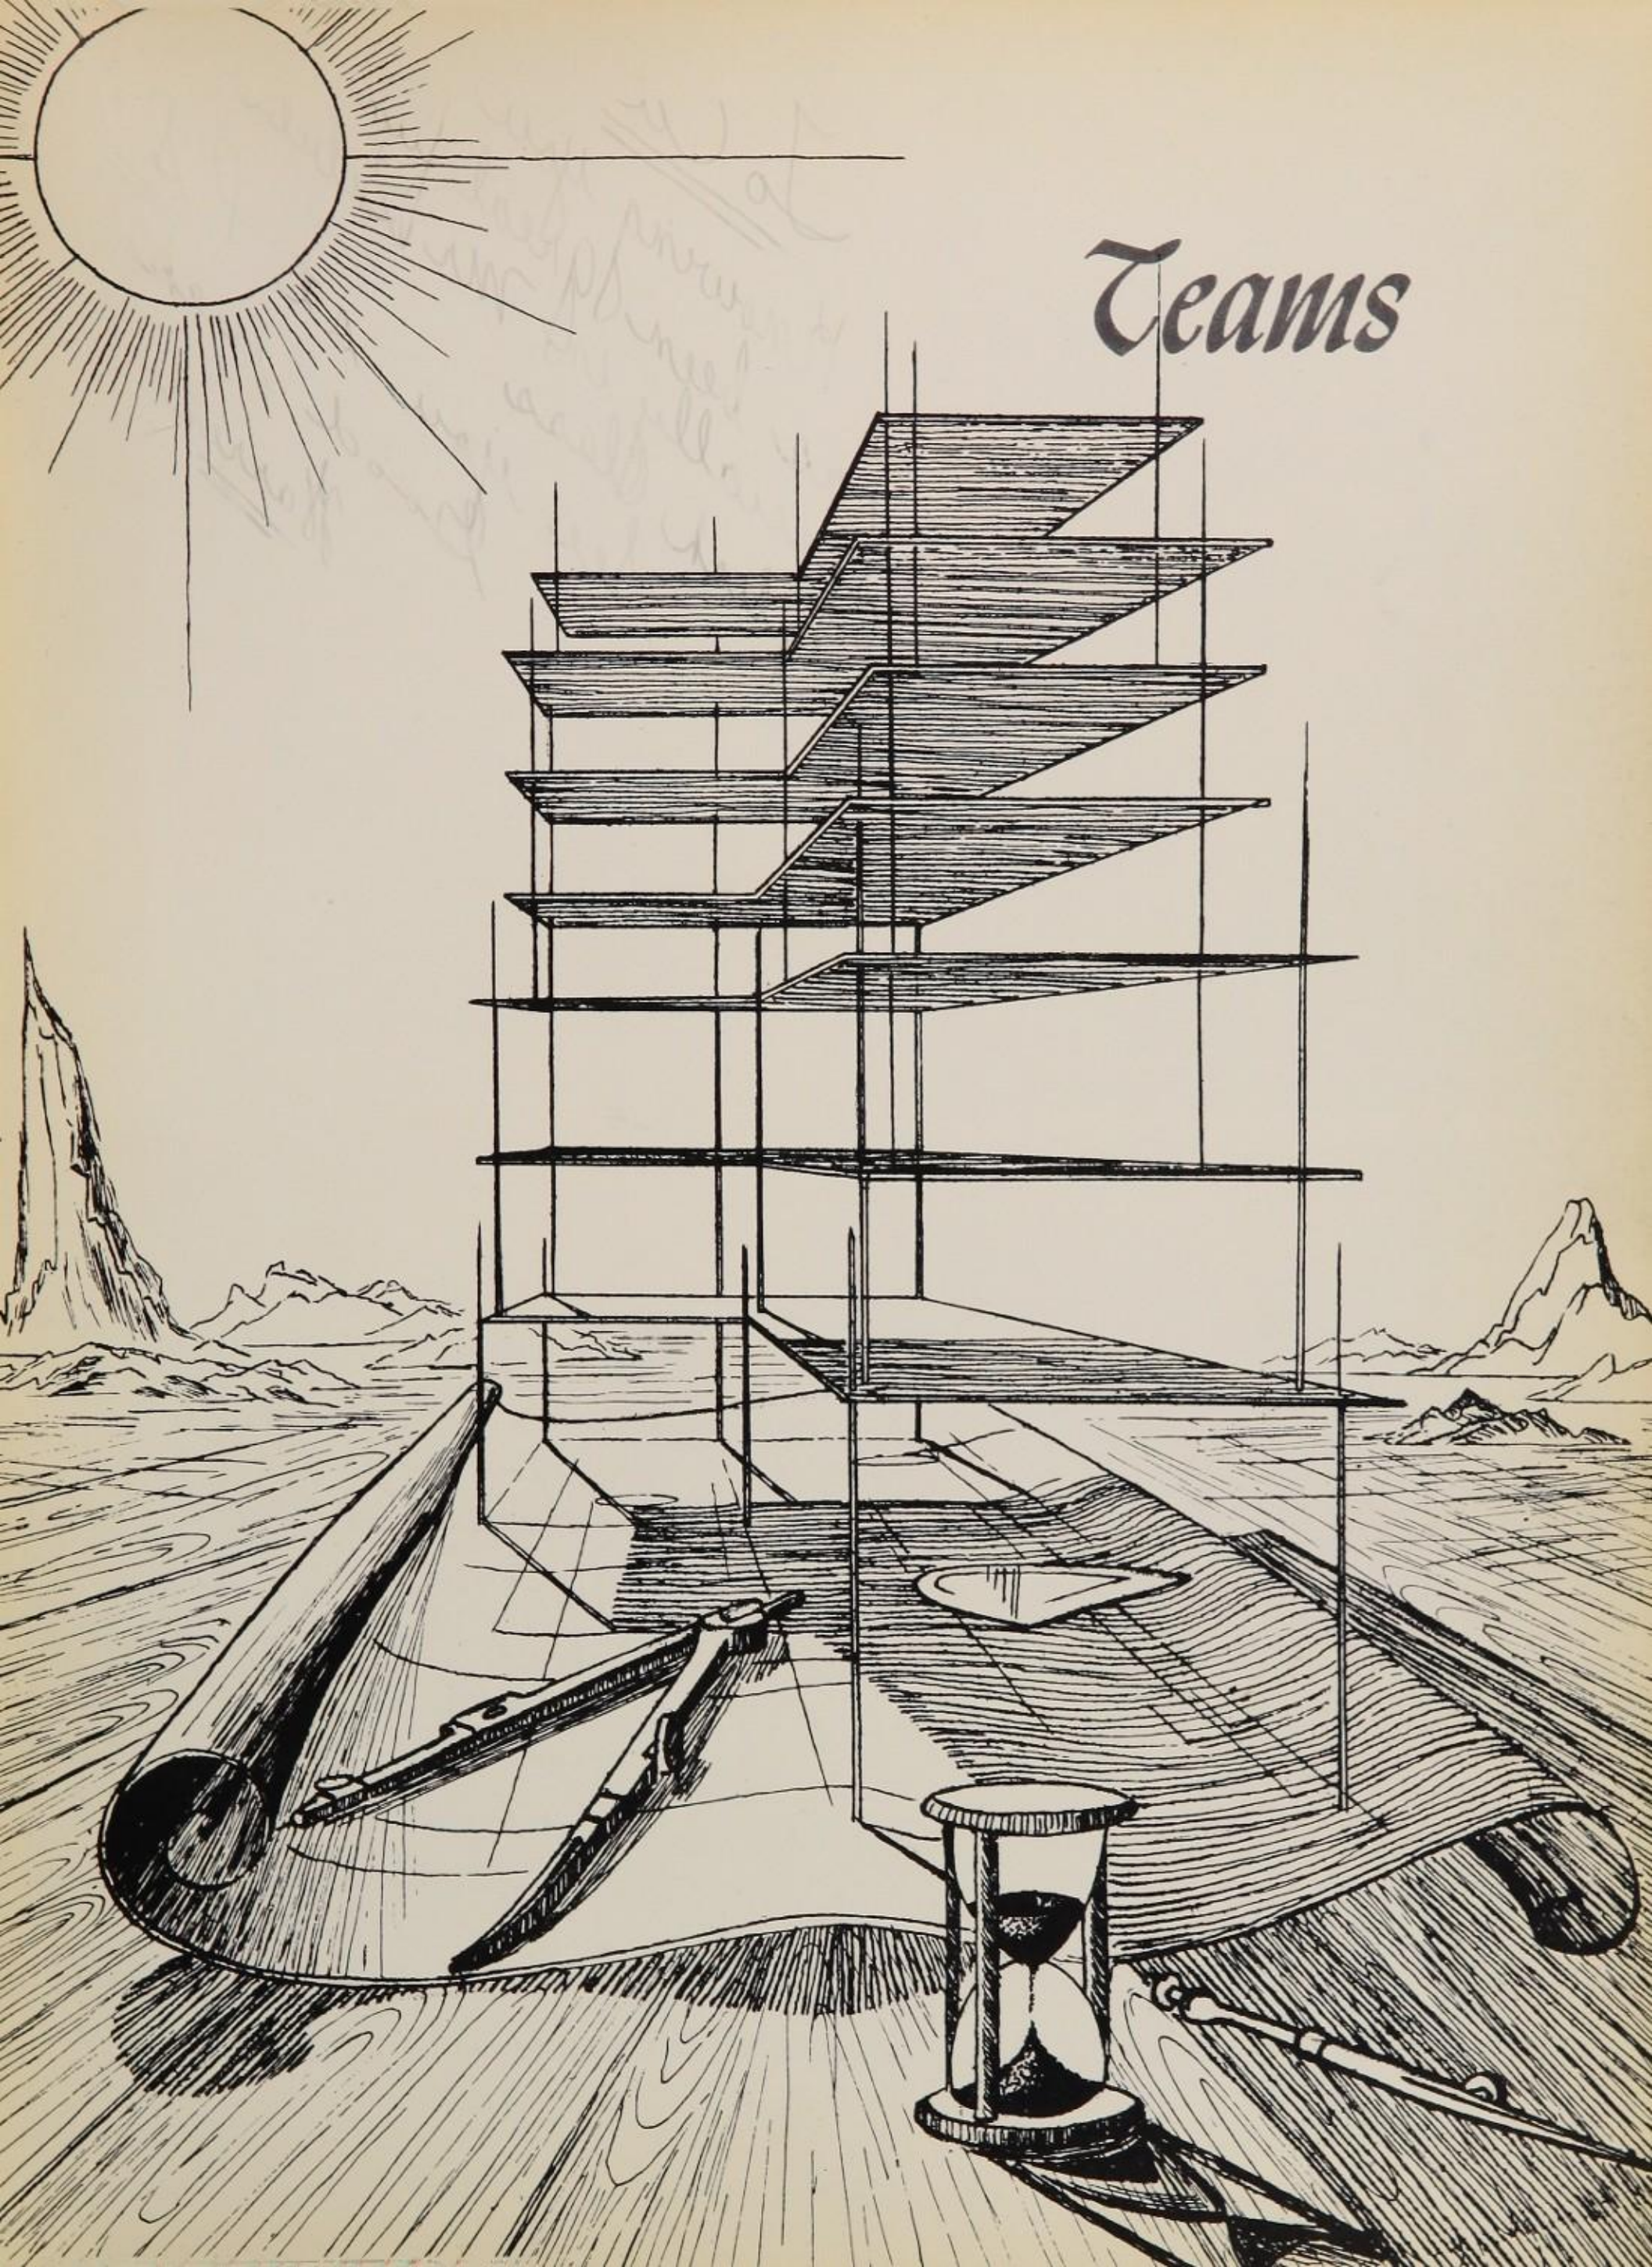
VISUAL AIDS—This squad, under the supervision of Mr. Breen, operates the school projectors.

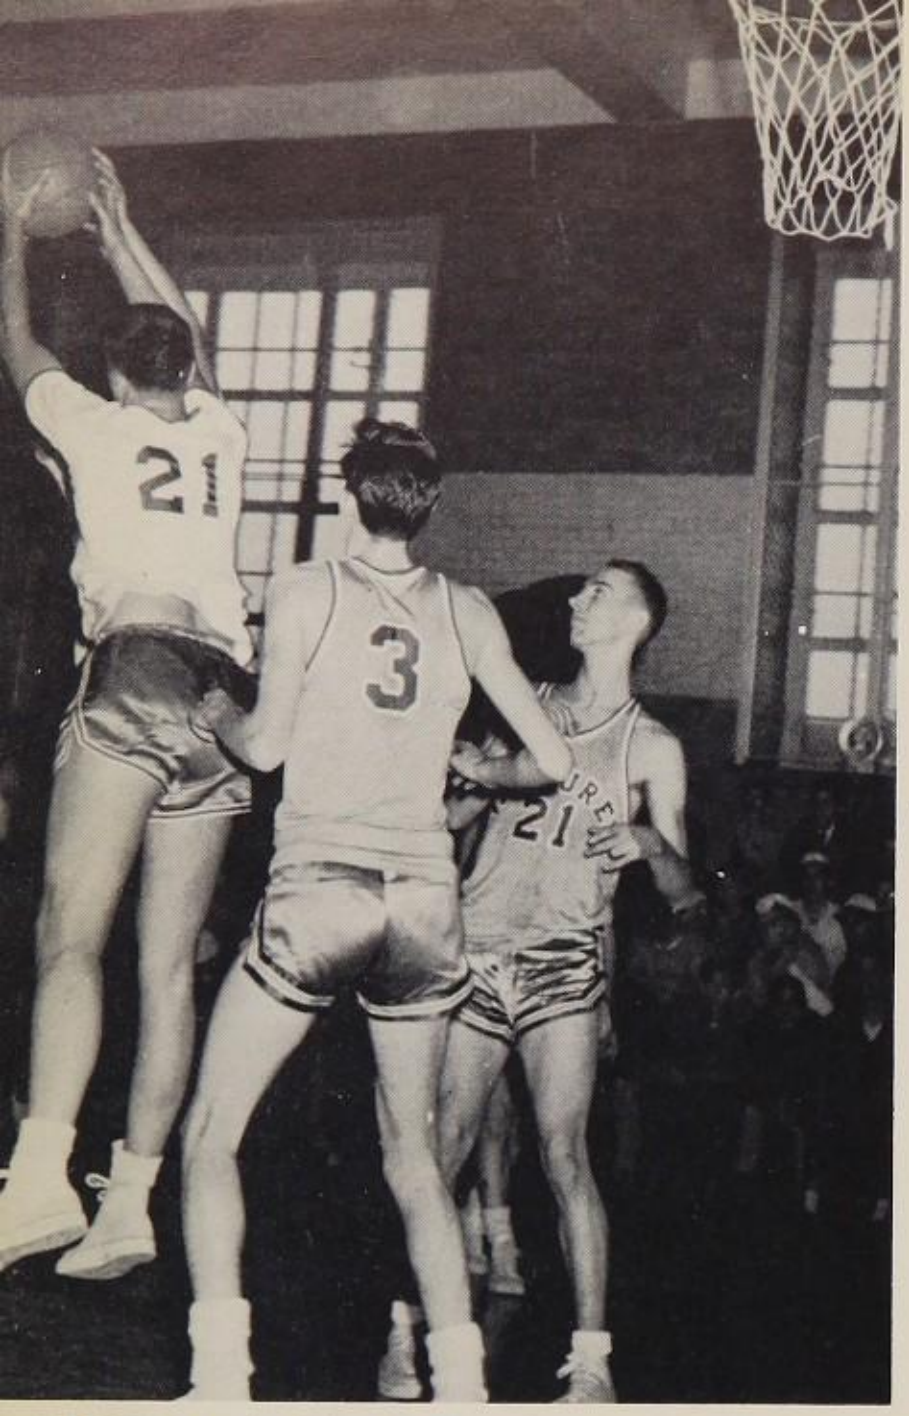
MUSEUM CURATORS—This newly established society is run by selected students, supervised by Mr. H. Gillary. They care for the school's animals.

SERVICE

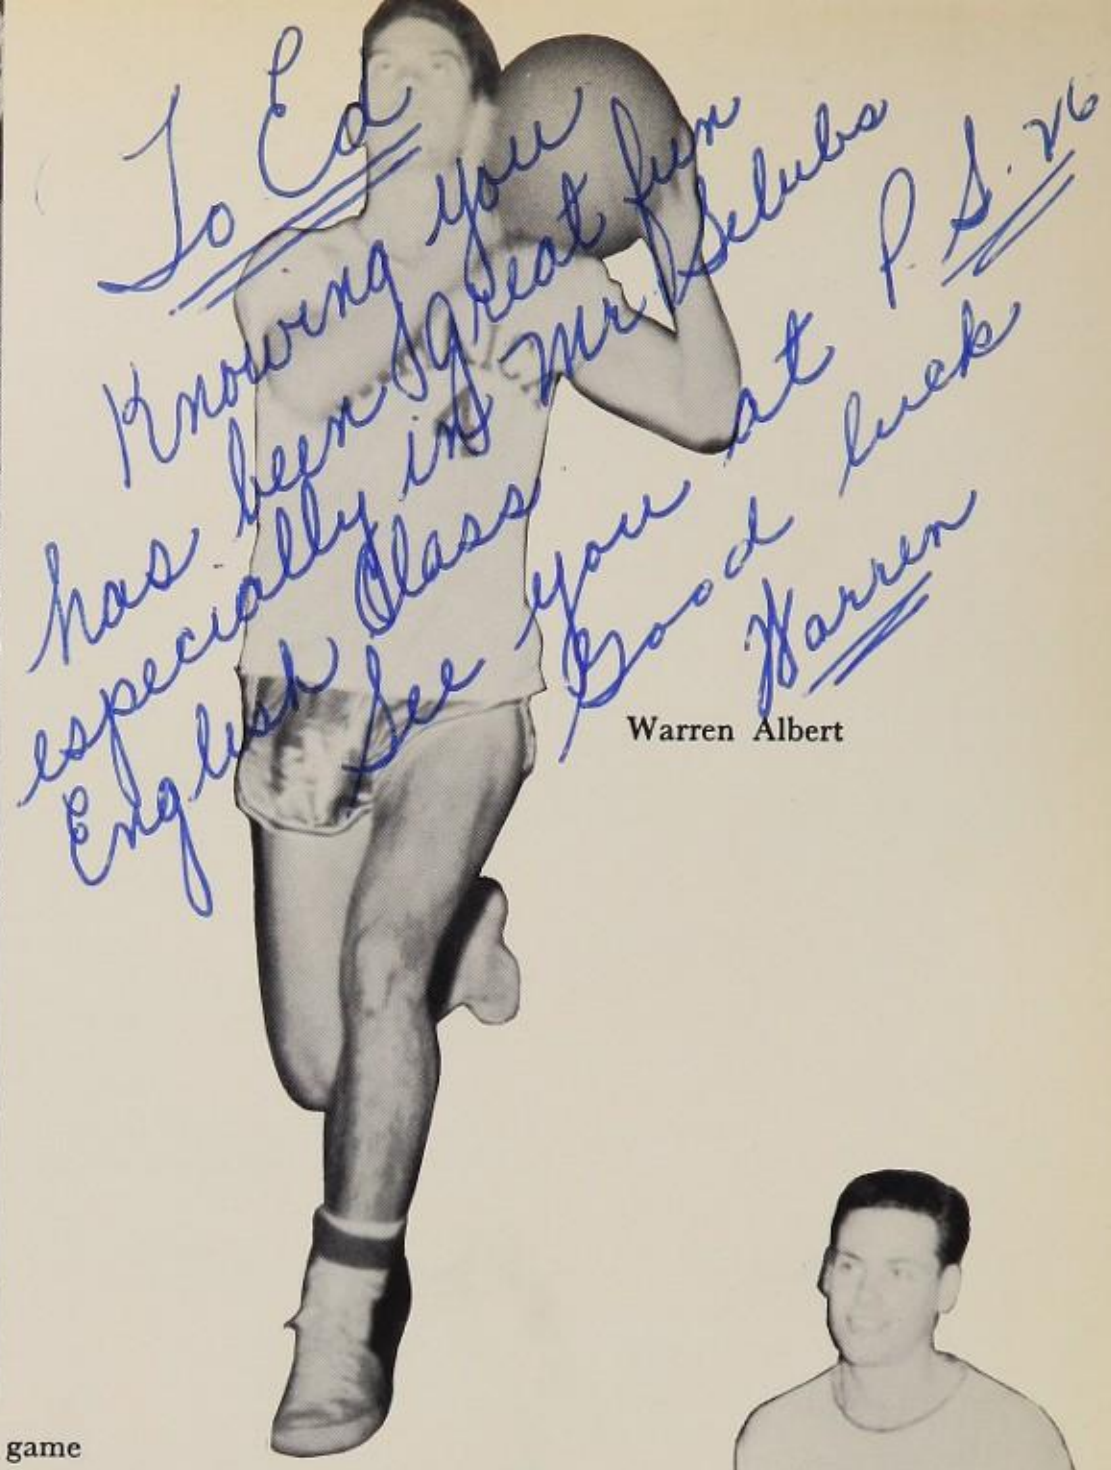
HONOR GUARD—Members of this squad, directed by Mr. Feldman, patrol Jamaica's halls and stairways.

Teams

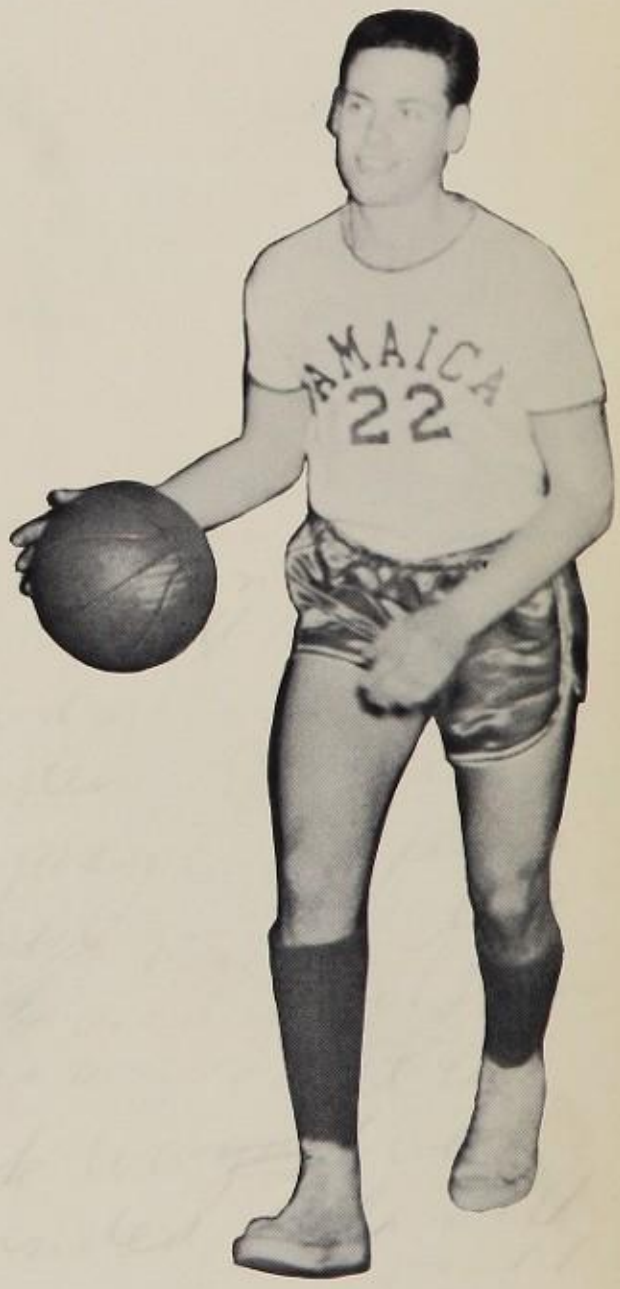




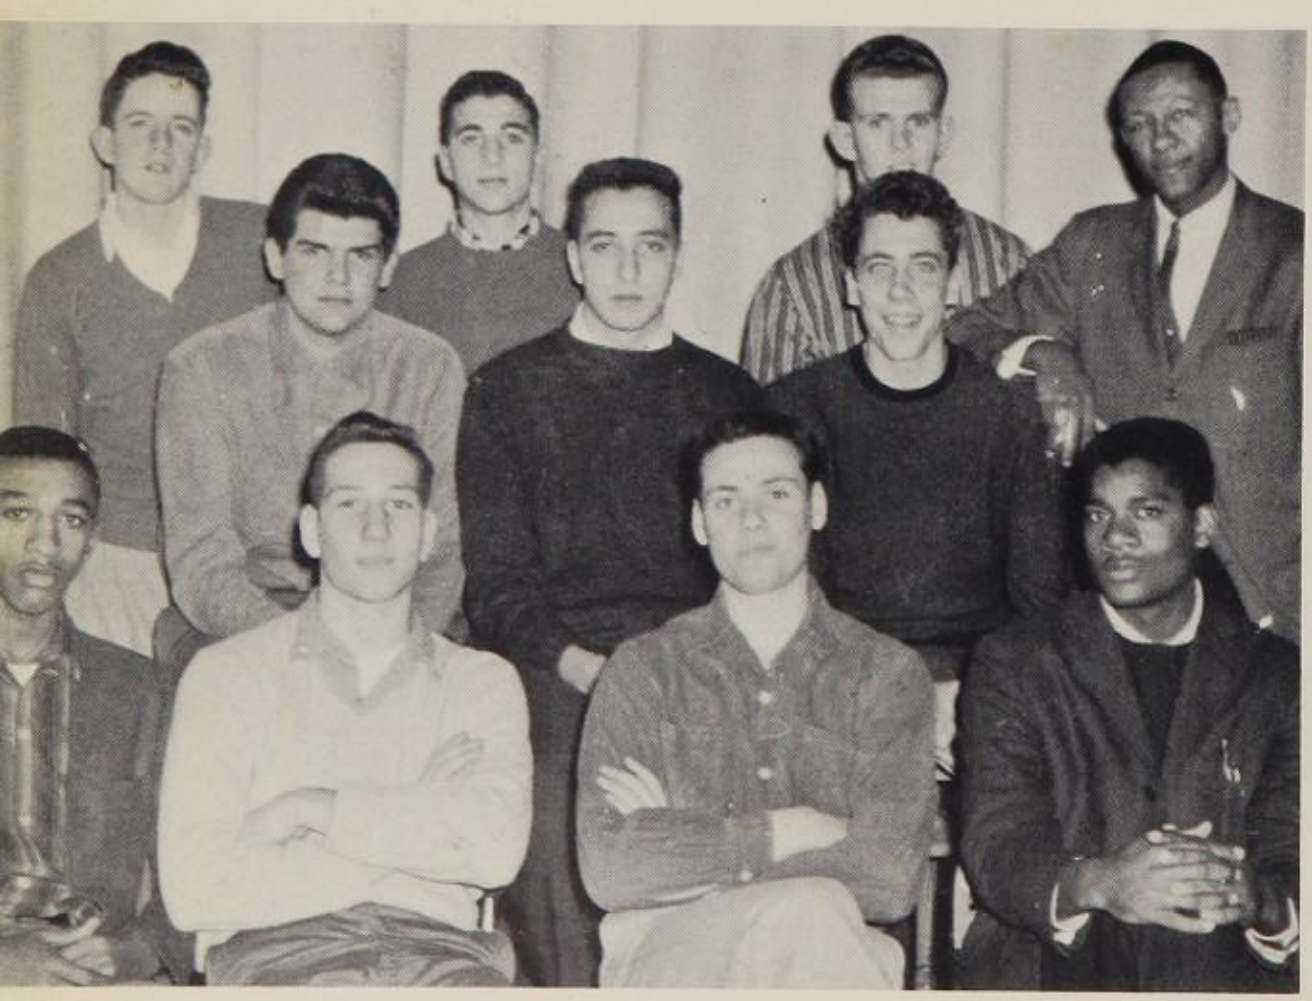
PIVOT MAN—Mike Furst grabs a rebound during a game against Martin Van Buren High School.



Warren Albert



Albert Wax,
Captain



CAGERS—Members of the basketball team are, top row (left to right): Maloney, Hodor, Gantman, Meyers. Second row: Allen, Furst, Parris. Front row: Young, Dubinsky, Wax, Busbee.

HIGH SCORER—Ed Busbee exhibits his crack jump shot in the season's opener. One of the Beavers' top scorers, Busbee, paced the team during the campaign. Although the Jamaicans lost the game, they went on to another fine season.

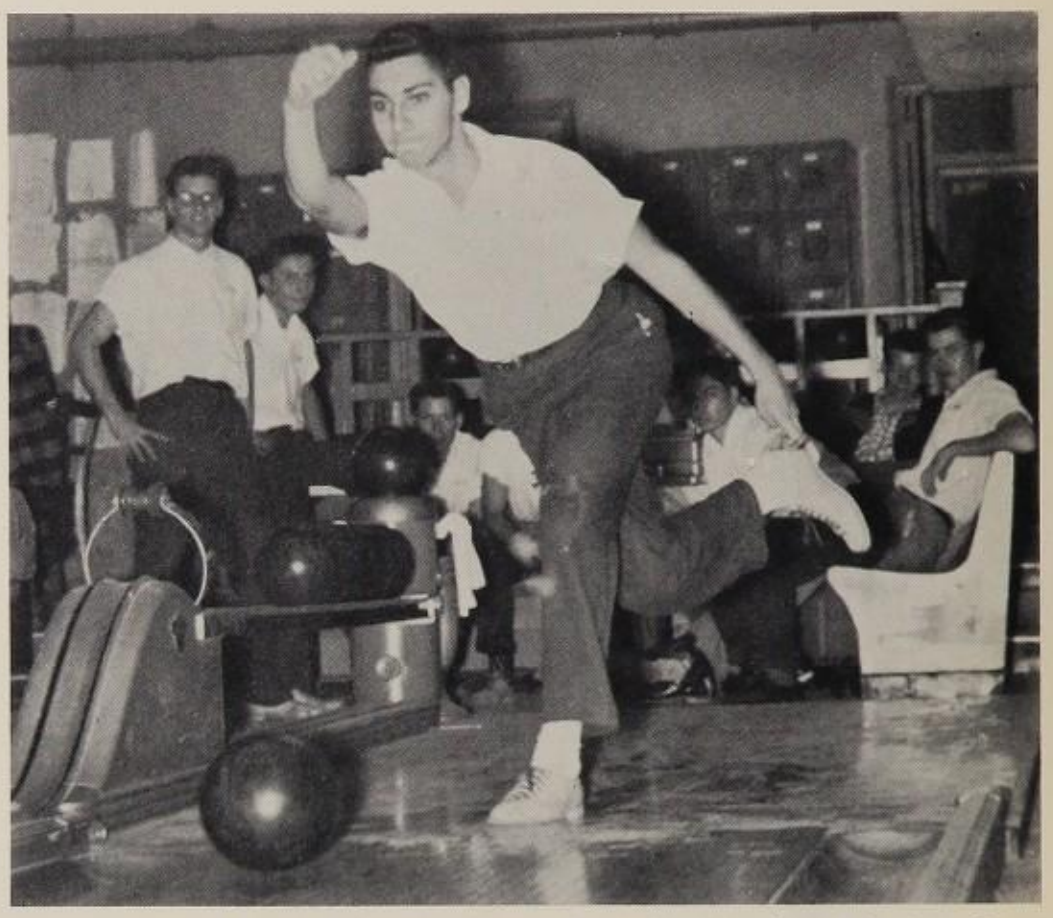
BASKETBALL

BEAVER REBOUNDER—Nick Allen (30) maneuvers for position after shot. Albie Wax (22) is moving into play while Ed Busbee (14) hits floor. Allen, at 6-5½, was the leading Beaver rebounder for this season.

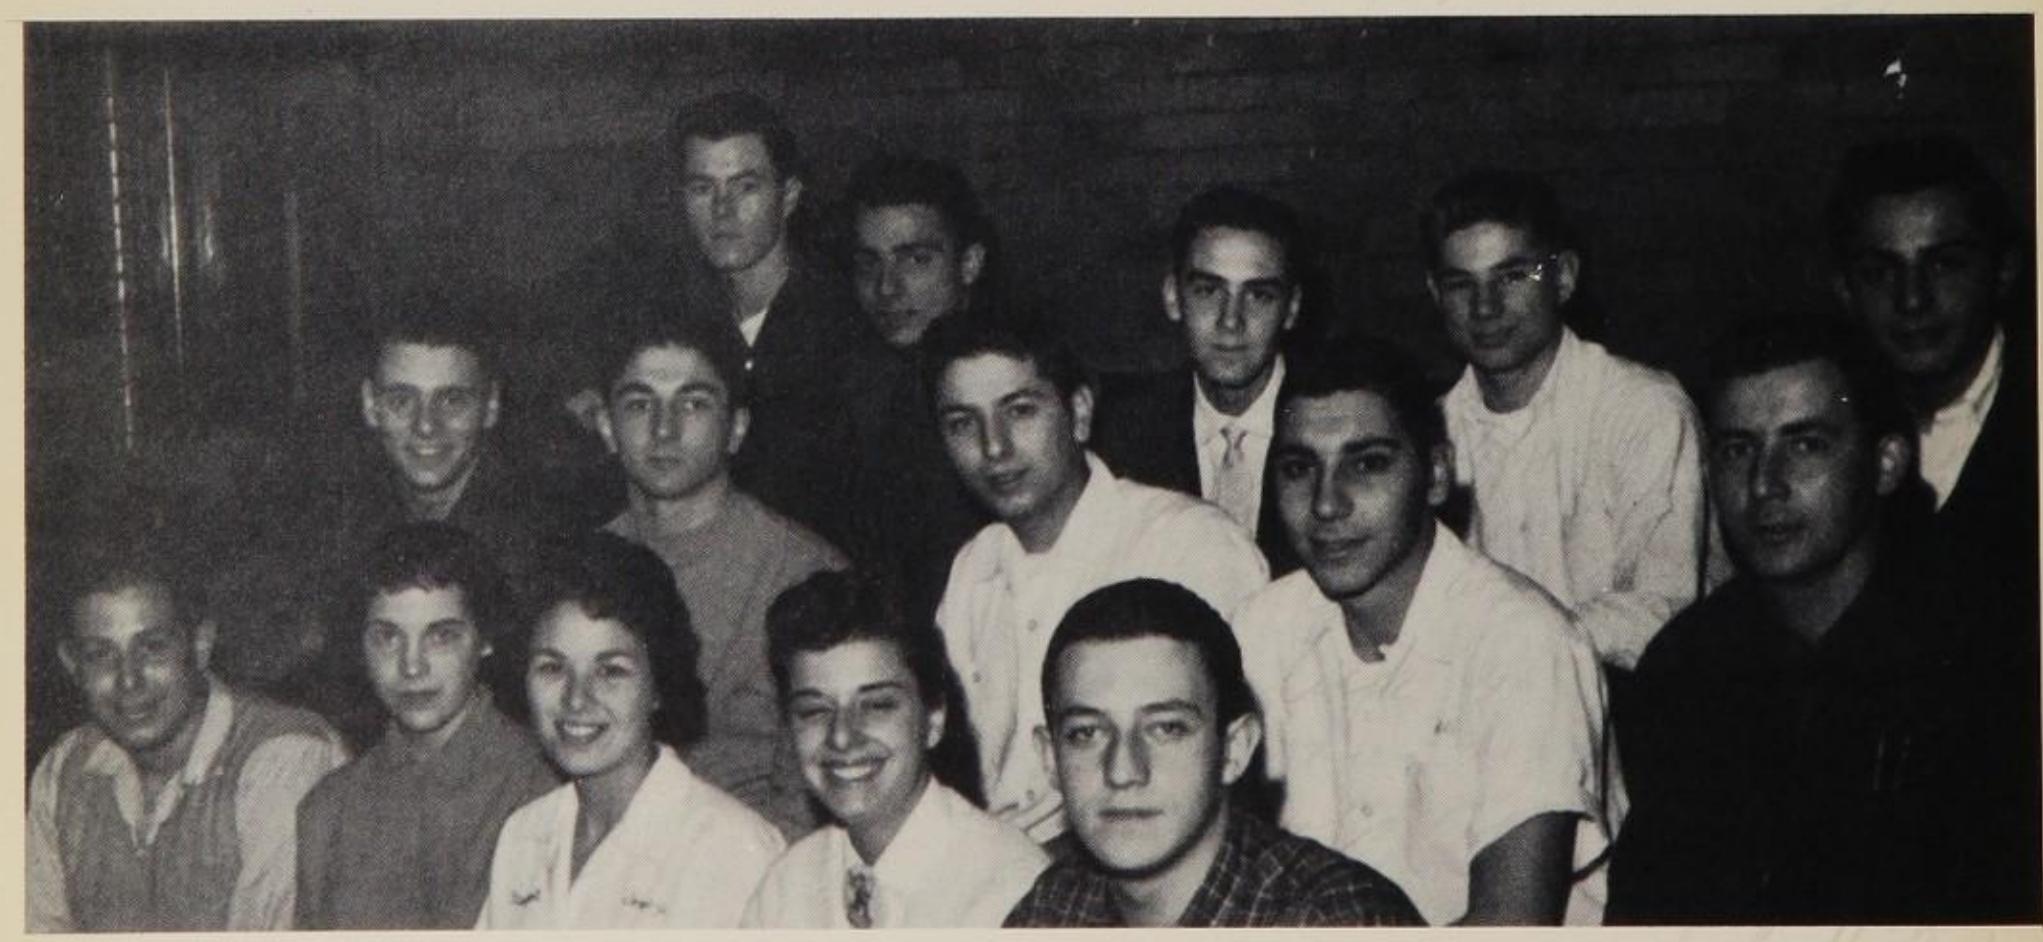
BRAIN TRUST—Discussing strategy for Hilltoppers are: Managers Mike Feigenbaum and Bob Seewald, Captain Albie Wax and the Coach Dave Halperin.

BOWLING

ROOKIE STANDOUT — Eugene Blankman rolling one of his frequent strikes this season. Gene's hefty 170 average was second highest on the keglers.



CAPTAIN—Elliot Slotnick shows championship form during the season. The veteran bowler rolled a consistent average in the high 150's.



JAMAICA HIGH BOWLING TEAM—1957 city champions: (left to right) First row: Asst. Mgr. Hal Saskin, Gerri Weiss, Honey Milafsky, Judy Judkowitz, Mgr. Fred Dubrowsky. Second row: Lee Adlowitz, Phil Moraci, Stan Markman, Captain Elliot Slotnick, Coach Al Finkelstein. Third row: Robert Livingston, Ludwig Perciavalle, Eugene Blankman, Toby Brimberg, Frank Devenuto. They finished the season with an outstanding record of 11 wins with 1 loss. By defeating the Brooklyn Tech Bowling team, they became the second championship bowling team to bless Jamaica since 1954. Coach Alvin Finkelstein displayed brilliant coaching ability.

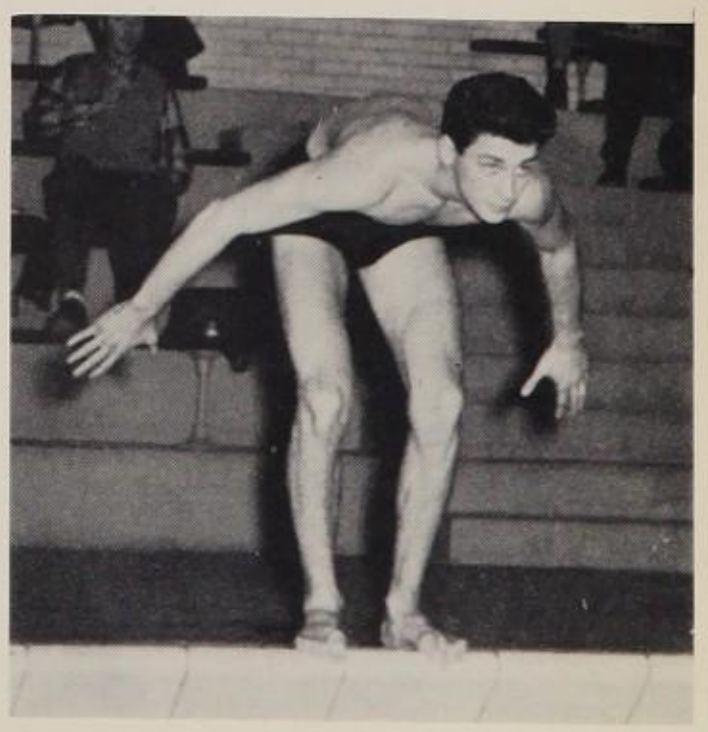
MENTORS—Coaches Stan Rubin and "Unk" Kendall

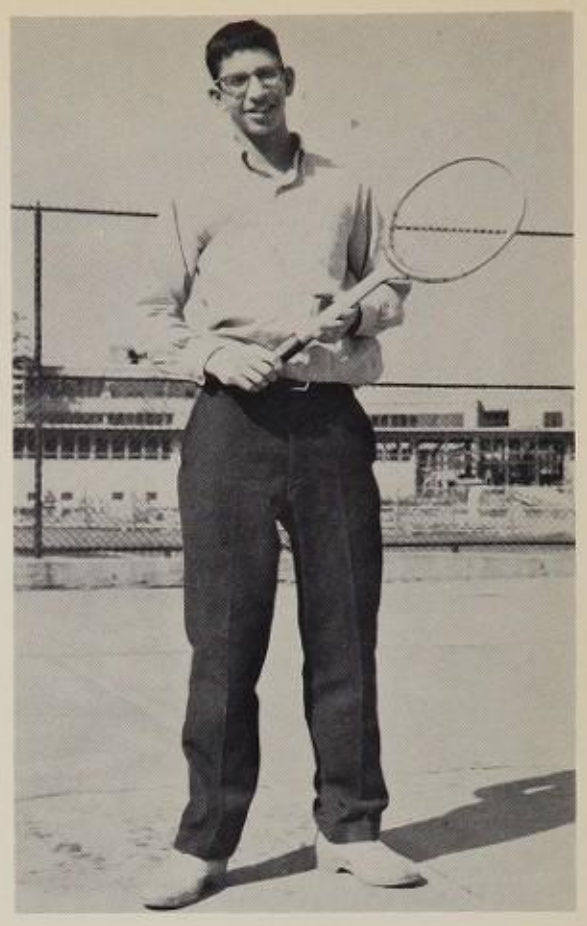
BACKSTROKE ACE—John Kapner is off to another placement. Kapner, the Beaver's co-captain, placed in eight meets.

SWIMMING

VERSATILE VETERAN—Co-captain Harvey Chertoff led Mermen by swimming in both freestyle and backstroke positions.



DOUBLE TROUBLE—Steve Jaffe and Eric Teicholz last year formed Beaver doubles combination. Their sparkling play helped racquetmen cop division and Queens championship.



SPEEDSTER—Possessor of great speed, Les Sufrin helped Netmen to their first Queens championship in 35 years. Les forms one of Jamaica's most promising Tennis hopes.

TENNIS

TENNIS TEAM—The defending Queens champions are, from left to right: N. Glickman, M. Feigenbaum, M. Macklis, J. Parker, A. Spitz, E. Teicholz, L. Sufferin, J. Mackler, Dr. H. Hurwitz, coach, N. Friedman, S. Jaffe, R. Levy, H. Schulman, A. Chang.

CAPTAIN—Kenny Levinson passes an unidentified opponent during the Queens championship match at St. John's University. John Balser, also of Jamaica, follows him around the turn. Racing against all Queens high schools, the trackmen came in ninth.

TRACK

INDOOR TRACK: John Balser crosses the finish line in a city meet.

SOCCER TEAM—Pictured above is Jamaica's soccer team. Although they did not finish in a lofty position in league standings, they displayed great promise for success in the ensuing years.

SOCCER

BOOTER CAPTAIN—Albert Chang led team at center position. Chang is a bright spot in Jamaica's soccer aspirations.

PRACTICE DRILL—Defenders Pessagno and Von Pluecker thwart attempted score by forwards Weinberg and Chang, while in background Oliva watches play unfold.

CONFERENCE—Coach George Baron giving a few words of wisdom to soccer team. Captain Chang, Von Pluecker, Weinberg, Oliva and Pessagno listen in avidly.

BASEBALL

BEAVER NINE IN ACTION—Last year's baseball team with Mr. Anselmo Piacentino at the reins finished the season with a respectable 7-5 record in league competition. Returning veterans this year are: Perry Kozlo, Richie Meglio, Luddy Perciavalle, Warren Albert, Basil Paul and Chris Eiler. The nine will rely on the prominence of several younger players in order to enhance upon last year's standings. Coach Piacentino is anticipating a successful year.

RIFLE

GOLF

FENCING

SEPTEMBER

Set the alarm clock early today—
We've had two months in which to play.
Sharpen the pencils and fill the pen;
We must return to school again.
We arrive at the school (but keep off the grass).
"Freshmen, buy an elevator pass."
When the thundering herd comes rushing in,
Our last big year is about to begin.
Now that we're seniors, we know how it feels
To be looked up to as the school's "Big Wheels."
Each Jamaican feels a proud sensation
To see the effects of the school's renovation.
And as we hear the first bell ring,
We wonder what the year will bring.

SENIORS:
". . . know how it feels to be looked

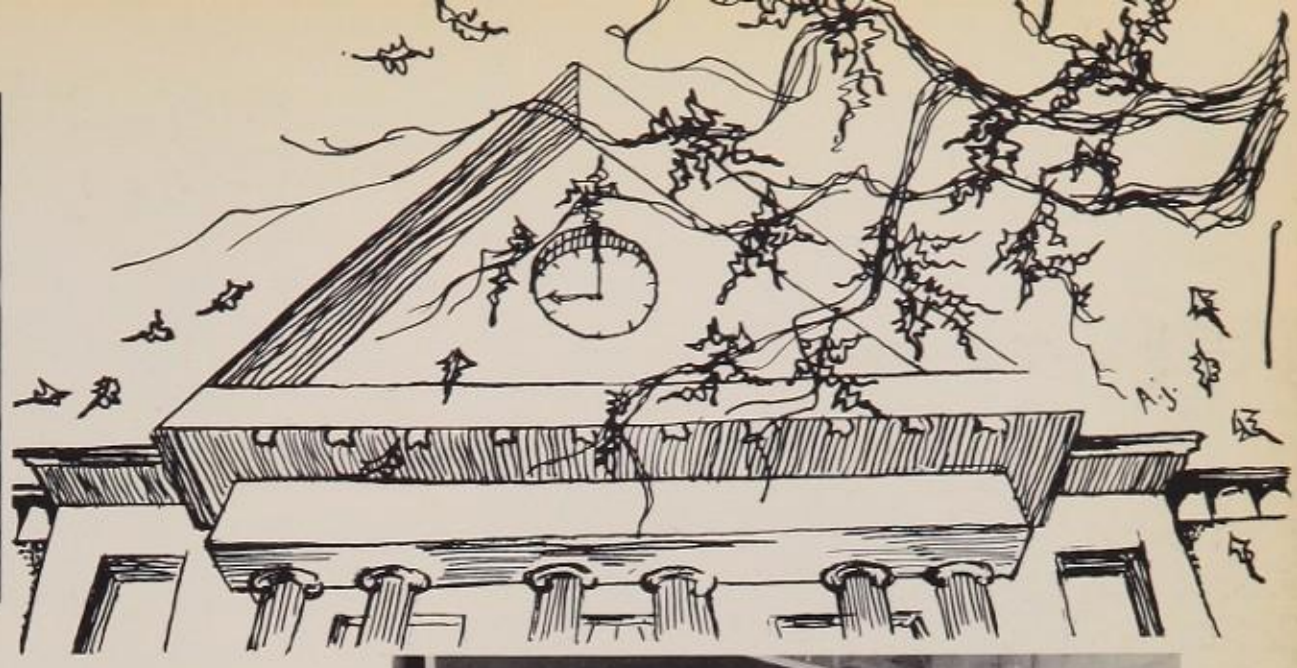
OCTOBER

The month of Columbus and Hallowe'en
Brings falling leaves and weather keen,
Which cuts attendance almost in two
By bringing sieges of Asian flu.
And those of us who aren't sick
Discuss the Series and Russia's Sputnik.
But events in Milwaukee and the ionosphere
Have nothing on what happens here—
For now Jamaicans make selections
Of officers in the school elections:
One party campaigns with "Gay Paree,"
The other, "The King and I.N.D.".
After the ballots are cast, the candidates wait
For winners and losers to learn their fate,
And as everybody cheers,
The victors earn their souvenirs.

"... go to the Hop ..."



NOVEMBER

"Oh, please say it isn't true,
'Just five applications are allotted to you.' "
After College Night, disturbed as can be,
We run to Mrs. Young, begging, "Please help me."
She speaks with us and confirms our suspicions
Regarding our plans and our future ambitions.
Very confused, we read applications,
Each question bringing more complications.
Between writing our autobiographies
And studying for midterms in three histories,
We'd lose our sanity if we didn't stop;
So we take time out to go to the Hop.
And as we struggle with our examinations,
The builders of Edison make preparations
For the Mayor to lay the cornerstone for
A brand new high school, right next door.

DEDICATION BY MR. WAGNER:

DECEMBER

Amid the cold and the snow of December
Come events we will fondly remember.
The New York skyline erected so tall
Is on view in our front hall;
Henry's scene catches everyone's eye
With its merrymakers hurrying by.
Cornelia and Emily go abroad
On stage, as all the critics laud
Jamaica's annual three-act play,
Our Hearts Were Young and Gay.
And poor Virginia is at a loss
To know if there's a Santa Claus.
Her queries are answered one by one
In our Christmas show, Letter to the Sun.
And after these two delightful plays,
We take our leave for the holidays.

CHRISTMAS DISPLAY:
". . . on view in our front hall . . ."

A Letter to the Sun, original play, written by Joyce Ford and Judy Sokiran, based on actual incident, was presented at Jamaica High School's annual Christmas assembly. Faculty directors were Mrs. Eleanor Campbell and Miss Gloria Saracco; student director, Arlene DuFine.

Included in the cast were: Evelyn Reiss, Ann Meror, Edward Geneti, Larry Strom, Gail Lesser, Duff Kreitzberg, Heris Stenzel, Leslie Einbinder, Judy Greenberg, Judy Winston, Wendy Rouder, Frank Von Pluecker, Hank Lubin, Marlene Lambert, June Denerstein, Rhoda Levitton, Sue Frantz, Marsha Ostrove, Diane Schwartz and Judy Glass.

MERIT FINALISTS:
". . . Everyone's studying . . ."
(l. to r.) Richard Burger, Steve Gould, Carol Kalish, Matthew Edel, Martin Weiner, Stuart Arm.

JANUARY

January's a month of worrying;
Harried seniors are madly scurrying.
College Boards loom not far away—
Everyone's studying, night and day.
Merit and Westinghouse winners find out;
So the "brains" of the school are known all about.
"Oh mercy me!" is a senior's loud cry,
"I must meet the deadline—I have to apply!
This autobiography's awful to write,
But I solemnly promise I'll do it tonight."
And when the Regents and Boards are o'er,
State Scholarship candidates study some more.
Midyear graduation's exciting but sad;
A few friends have left us; so we feel quite bad.
Then exams are all over and marks are all in;
And it's time for our happy eighth term to begin.

WESTINGHOUSE WINNERS:
". . . the 'brains' of the school . . ."
(l. to r.) David Meltzer, Philip Wagreich, Richard Burger, Harold Fetterman.

PRINCIPAL AND VALEDICTORIAN:
". . . Midyear graduation's exciting but sad . . ."

FEBRUARY

Just when this rush has made us deranged,
It's February, and things have changed.
After suffering through five months of grief,
We heave a sigh of blessed relief.
No more dreary memorization
From Brownstein and Weiner's conglomoratio
Our Regents exams have been passed or faile
College applications have all been mailed;
The yearbook has been sent to press at last.
Now we can rest. Our trials past,
Lazily we stretch out on our backs,
Kick off our shoes, and just relax.
In tomes for facts we'll no more grovel—
We'll read an unimportant novel.

WINNERS:

Richard Dankner

Fred Neulander

ELECTION TIME:

MARCH

The month of March comes in like a lion
While orating candidates duplicate Bryan.
'Tis the season for G.O. elections again
With weeks of excitement in store for us when Caucuses nominate, managers promote,
And both of the parties vie for the vote.
The themes of "The Gold Rush" and "Anchors Aweigh,"
The posters and oilcloths are all on display.
When results are announced at the Victory Dance,
The excitement dies down and we all have a chance
To get back to work.—There are tests we must pass;
So Achievement Test cramming comes after class.
The passing of Boards and the equinox
Bring us warm weather and suddenly, flocks
Of students try out for school teams
Or merely pursue their vernal dreams.

CAUCUS:
". . . the parties vie for the vote . . ."

SCIENCE:
". . . scientists . . . prepare . . . for the Science Fair . . ."

APRIL

Spring may be the season of romantic inclination,
But in April we've no time for such occupation.
The midterms present our first Waterloo;
We're sure we received below twenty-two.
Easter vacation comes at last
And again, we put off things we put off in the past.
We are sure we will read, construct, and create;
But it is more likely we'll just dissipate.
A student group takes this spring vacation
To visit Washington, the heart of our nation.
Our scholarly scientists with ideas so rare,
Prepare exhibits for the Science Fair.
During this period of varied activities
The colleges extend their usual civilities—
They want interviews galore,
But for their answers, we must wait one month more.

ALL DAY CONFERENCE:
". . . varied activities . . ."

WASHINGTON TRIP:
". . . visit . . . the heart of our nation . . ."

TICKET SALES:
". . . The strongbox . . ."

FINIAN'S RAINBOW:
". . . rehearse both night and day . . ."

FINIAN'S RAINBOW:
". . . opening night is nigh . . ."

MAY

May is a month of great anticipations.
The seniors wait for answers to their college applications:
Acceptances, rejections — the feelings run quite high;
Distraught, our seniors nervously begin to laugh or cry.
The colleges' final answers will leave but little doubt
That our high school days are waning; the year is almost out.
In the midst of all this tension, a festive note sounds clear:
Jamaica's spring production is scheduled to appear,
Heralded by the harbinger of all Jamaica's shows,
The strongbox for the tickets sold by dauntless Mr. Rose.
The show is Finian's Rainbow, the props are on display,
And many eager thespians rehearse both night and day,
Looking for the pot of gold, as stage hands scurry by.
It's evident to all involved that opening night is nigh.
Thus gaiety and gravity have filled the month of May,
And for our final weeks of school have surely paved the way.

BOAT RIDE:
". . . a trip to Rye . . ."

JUNE

And now at last June is here,
The final month of our Senior year—
A time, before we say good-bye,
To enjoy ourselves on a trip to Rye,
To celebrate on Senior Day
With costumes and the Senior Play,
To go to the Prom at the Plaza Hotel—
All these we shall remember well.
The teachers and the classrooms, the friends that we've made,
Each one, a memory which will never fade.
And as the final day draws near,
Amidst the excitement—one small tear,
Because we know we must say adieu
To Jamaica, the school of Red and Blue;
But tears turn to smiles, regret to elation,
As, in caps and gowns, we attend Graduation.

The

Dory Leicester met an old enemy on the train, and the old enemy was drunk. They stood between two coaches. Dory wanted to go by, but at the sight of him the man felt old flares of hurt springing up, and wouldn't let him pass. The man was angry, and drunk, with old and new angers souring his stomach. Fear fell away, and vindictiveness clotted the man's thinking. He threw Dory off the train. And Dory lay in the mud beside the track, a rock hard against his thigh, and a great pain banging his eyes. The train angled into the distance, and the meadow stretched bleak and brown and empty.

Dory lay listening to his heartbeat's panic. One hand was doubled under his stomach; with the long powerful fingers of the other, he scooped a little hole in the mud. The dirt lodged under the whites of his nails; the straw-grass prickled his forehead and tickled between his lips. After a while, he stumbled to standing, pushing his back up first, and drawing his legs forward to a crouch. The dizziness overwhelmed him. Trying to push out the pain, Dory pounded the heel of his hand against his head. He was frightened standing there, with the daylight paling, and the beat of his blood saying: hurry, hurry, you better do something right away, quick! Fear motivated him to run, and he whispered: let me be all right; let me be all right. But his long legs twisted under, their muscles quivering. He blinked and squinted, trying to force his brain to concentrate. There is a town, he thought, and then the thinking veered. There is a town . . . a town in . . . there is . . . yes, a town and not far . . . if I can walk slowly. . . .

Come on, he said softly. He felt his bones shooting out, pressing through his head and back, and stretching his skin taut. He was behind a tractor and he was pushing it, a big monster of a tractor, while a voice hummed: push, push! He felt the urge to lie down grow within him, and he said again, come on, Dory, but he was on a big bed, wider than the spread of his arms. Little fragments of thought and jig-saw puzzle sections of pictures staggered in his head. When he didn't come home, Elise. . . . He saw a newspaper article: "Man Disappears from Train," on the page after the murders and the marriages. All the people he knew would read it and think: I never thought something like this could happen to someone I know.

But you, Dory, he thought, you don't have to be afraid. Everything will be all right. You know what you're doing. Sure! It's getting late . . . train's in now . . . what'll they do with the suitcase, I wonder . . . brown imitation leather lying next to a big plaid car sack . . . brown imitation leather and initials stamped in gold—D.P.L.—Dorian Peter Leicester.

Bare bones of a town clutched at the earth.

RELENTLESS HOUSES

Illustrated by MICHAEL ADVOCATE

Dory picked the nearest house, white and widely windowed. He rapped on the sill and called, "Would you help me, please? Could you please help me?"

They saw him through the window, a gnarled shadow of a man; and the woman was afraid. They locked the doors, back and front and side, and sat in the back of the house where the blinds were closed. They drew the curtains of the kitchen windows. Hurry, Dory thought, oh hurry.

Secure in its padlocks, the house of white wood mocked him. They sat, and turned the radio on. Loud.

But there are other houses, Dory whispered, and turned to another where a screen door swung against faded gray slats. He grazed his hand on the wire.

The daughter answered, but shut the door quickly when she saw him.

"Please," Dory called, "please, could you help me? If you could, please—" He banged the door over and over. His fist became criss-crossed with little scratches.

She had run and told her father. He came to the window and yelled, "Whaddya want here? Get out, will you. Stay in your own town. We don't need any drunks. Get away and stay away! We don't want any trouble."

"Look mister, I just—"

"I said to get out! You scram or we'll send someone after you. Now keep away, understand?"

Dory stood in the darkness, folding the edge of his train ticket over and back. Tense with aching, he stood watching the closing of doors of the shuttered, relentless houses. And the trembling that lay in his chest became a moaning in his throat and a crying on his lips. He ran, shouting at the houses, "Help me!" and his voice broke with the shouting, and his voice all husky cried, "Don't let me die!"

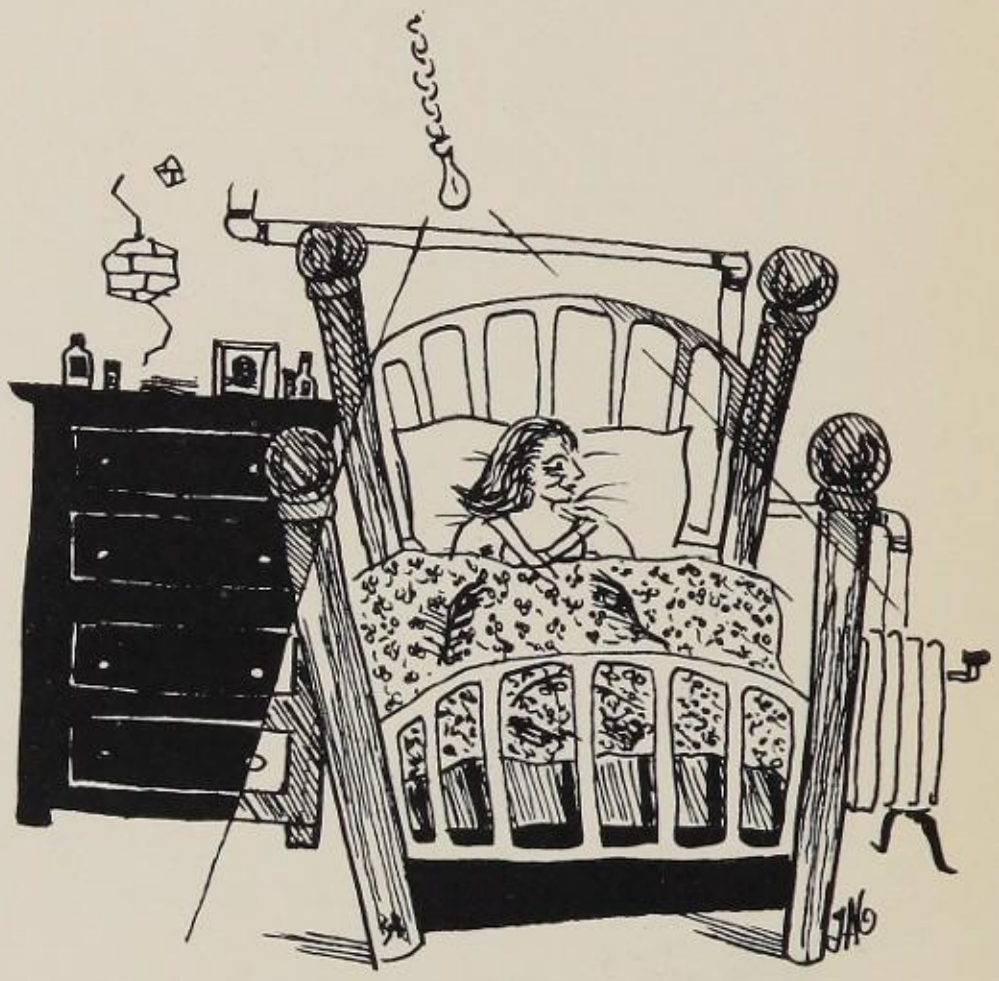
He ran into the meadow. Hurry, his blood sang, hurry! He fell over a rock and rolled downhill over pebbles and sticks. Hurry, Dory, hurry, and all the while he rolled, spitting out bits of grass and mud in dribbles of saliva, no longer hurting afresh at each new bruise.

Then the hill sloped to a pond. Dory shut his eyes to feel water cool on his head. Muttering some half words, he sent little bubbles up and then lay still. Sharp stones cut his face, but Dory lay quiet.

ELLEN STRAUSS

A PORTRAIT

Illustrated by JUDITH GERSTEN



The streets are asleep. They lie dark and quiet in the middle of the night. As you walk along a street in Flatbush, you look at the houses patterned with shadows under the eerie light of the street lamps. The houses are nothing more than permanent shanties. All the windows are dark, all except one. One window is lit by a bare incandescent bulb.

The bulb is in a small 8 by 10 room. On a bed taking up half the room lies an old woman. She lies motionless, the upper part of her body propped up against a few pillows. The bare bulb brings out the ugliness of the small room. The faded green paint on the wall is peeling. The ceiling is cracked and crumbling. In front of the window are two hard straight chairs. Against one wall looms a large, grey, portable closet, standing like a motionless pillar casting a dark shadow onto the discolored linoleum. On top of the closet lie two valises and an ancient radio with its wire wound spirally around it. Against the wall next to the bed is a bureau painted a ghastly black. On its top are numerous bottles containing pills and a large blue bottle of calamine lotion streaked with drippings. A few old yellow pictures rest also on top of the bureau. Above the bed hangs a picture of an old man with a white heavy beard, his piercing eyes staring at the small room. Above the bed is a silver pipe running down to the radiator at the foot of the bed. In the adjoining kitchen a leaky faucet drips continually.

On the old and beaten bed, high above the floor, lies the old woman. Her white hair stands messed on her head. Her brow is wrinkled. Her cheeks are sallow and sunk and are creased with lines. Her colorless lips lie parted. Her shriveled body is covered with a gawdy faded kimono, which lies open on her chest exposing part of her white shrunken breasts which have known the teeth of four children. Her arms are merely bones covered with sagging flesh. She seems to have no body. She lies covered by the quilts. Her tired eyes glare incessantly at one of the pictures on her dresser. It is the picture of a young woman, smiling, and pretty, her youngest daughter who was alive just two short years ago, but who now is dead. Her eyes seem to meet those of the old woman staring at them.

The woman continually gasps for the breath that comes hard. Sometimes her chest is wracked with a sharp shooting pain and she cries out. But the cry is heard only by the night.

The woman's life is completed. She has reached the end of the road, the road which has led to this small room where she lies alone in the world, alone with the glaring bulb, the dripping faucet and a bleak haunting silence pierced only with pain and memories.

Child of the TWENTIETH CENTURY

Illustrated by HENRY RUAS

I was born, not because I asked to,
But because my parents wanted to create.
Others have created, created a world—
A death-filled, fear-filled, hate-filled world.
I am a child of the twentieth century.

I have been brought up as a hope,
A light; and yet there is only darkness about—
The darkness of blood, rivers of blood,
Seas of broken and dead men's blood.
I am the salvation of the twentieth century.

I have seen dreams destroyed,
Hopes destroyed, life destroyed—
Crushed by the ominous movement of time,
Lost for eternity, lost for all time.
I am the builder of the twentieth century.

I have witnessed death in name of life,
War for the sake of peace.
Lies are committed to preserve the truth,
And the world has found no truth.
I am the oracle of the twentieth century.

I have heard great and wondrous things,
Of kind and good and noble deeds,
And maybe there still is hope.
Almighty God, give us hope.
I am the savior of the twentieth century.

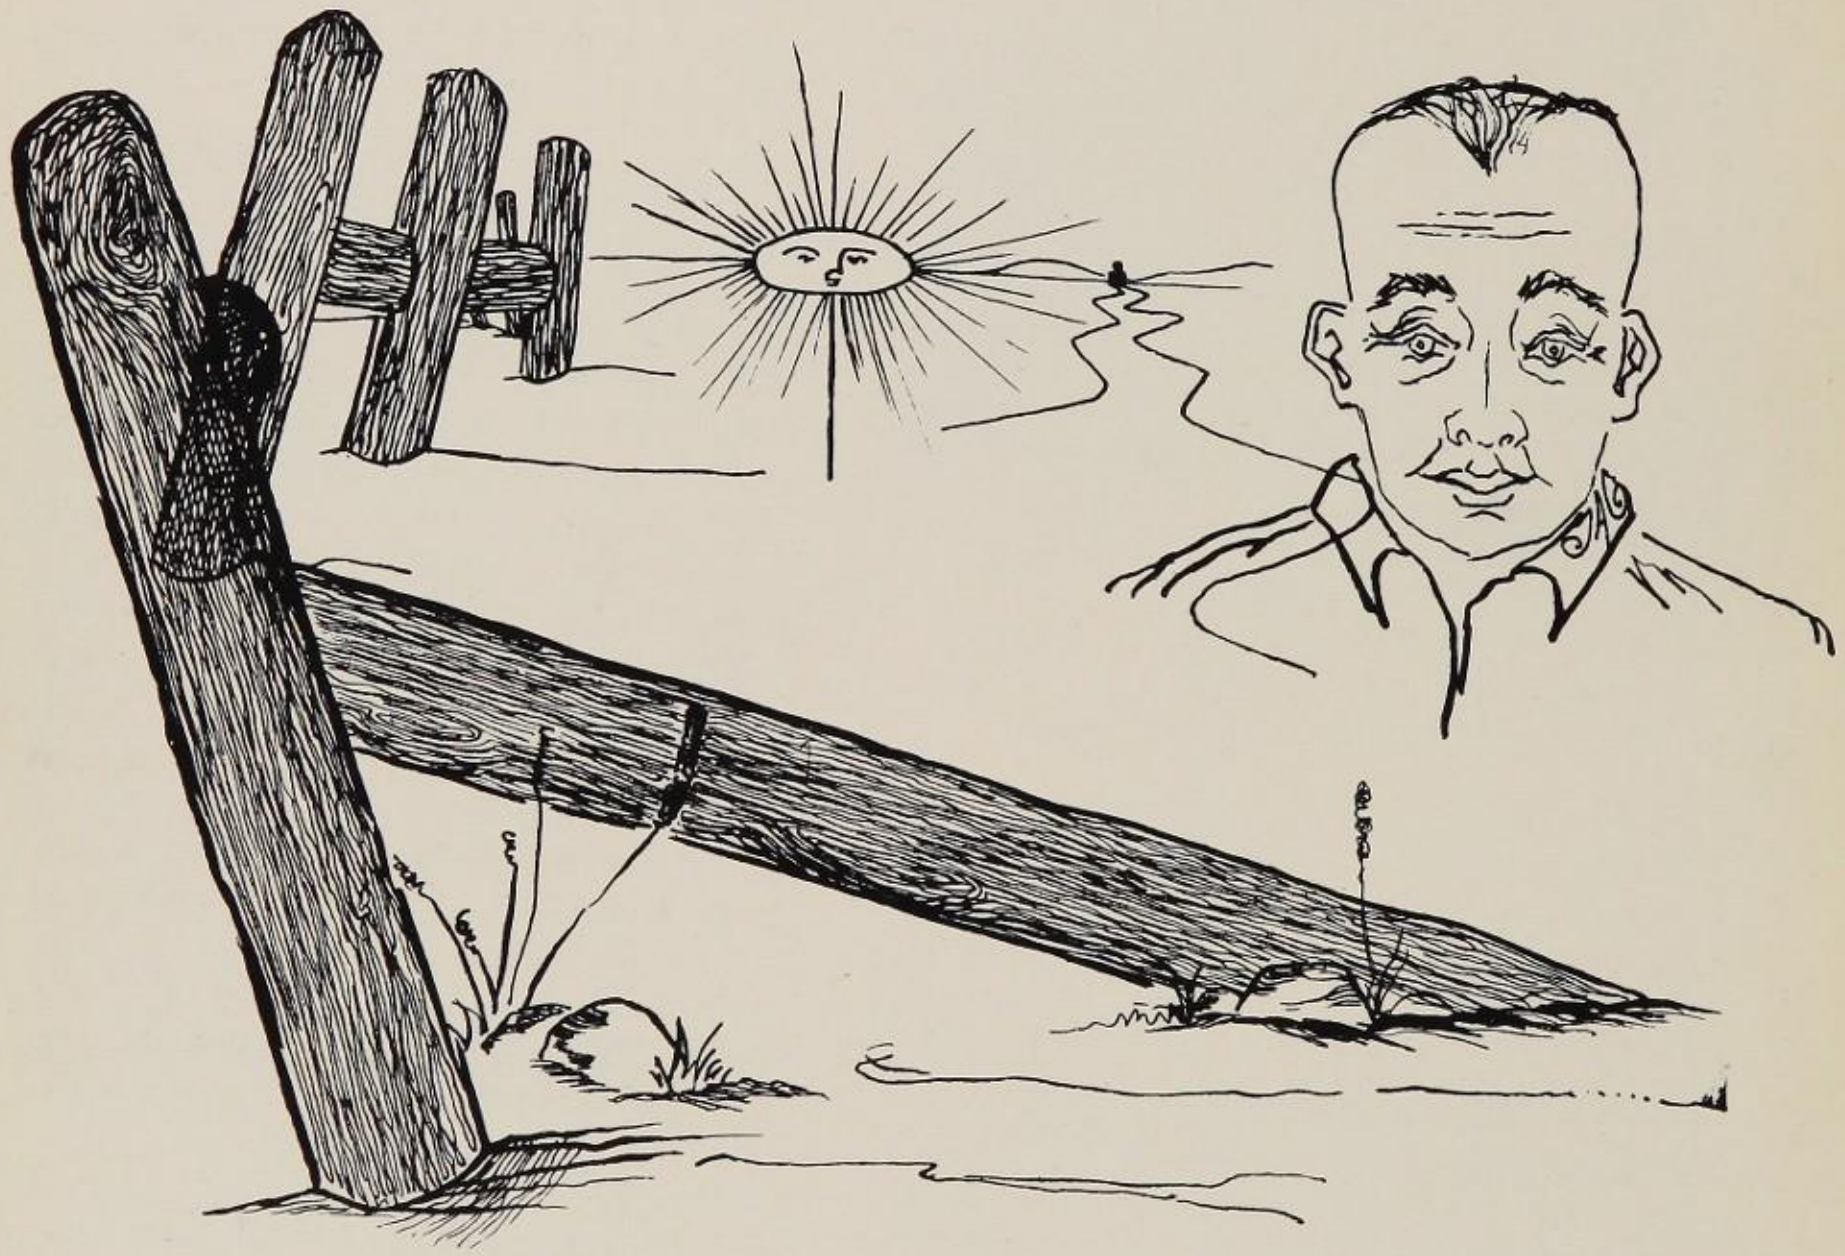
SIMON AT THE WELL

Illustrated by JUDITH GERSTEN



Simon ambled along the dusty road, not bothering to pick up his feet. In consequence, they raised a whirl of dust up to his knees so that it looked from a distance as if he were walking on a swirling yellow cloud. Simon was happy today and he turned his face to the sun, taking in its heat, and letting a bright orange glow seep up before his closed eyes. His visage was blessed with a look of eternal childishness, stemming from his mouth with its corners constantly turned up, and his bright blue eyes. This aura pervaded, though he was almost bald except for about thirty long hairs which lay in disarray atop his head. Simon was pleased with life this morning. He had a handkerchief with a piece of pumpkin pie in it, and hopes of a job in the next town he reached.

The road ended abruptly. Confronting Simon and stretching as far as he could see, was a wooden fence about ten feet high. Simon pondered the problem. "I have not seen a town for two days," he thought, hand on chin in the traditional pose of the thinker, "and I am sure there is one at the end of my path, which must go on, on the other side of this fence. No doubt, this fence has been long forgotten and I shall see no human face within its borders." "And with this thought, Simon upped and climbed the fence, jumping from the top and landing in a cloud of dust on the path. He arose and walked on, whistling as he went.

Simon strolled along gaily enough for about a half hour, with nothing in sight but a broad meadow which was broken only by the path he traveled. Soon hunger began a gentle gnawing at his stomach, and the dust of the road had made his throat quite dry. "How thirsty I am," he said aloud, and, as if by way of reply, far in the distance he perceived a well, sitting directly in the center of the road. "When I reach it," he thought, "I shall have my pie and, after, a cool drink."

The well stood solidly on the path, a well like all other wells, formed of stones with a bucket on a rope enabling it to be lowered or raised at will. As Simon approached it, he saw, to his dismay, that the road did not continue past this circular mass of stones, but ended suddenly at its base. "Ah well," he soliloquized, "I shall rest against this well and eat, then draw some refreshment from it, and go on across the fields." And so he sat, his head resting against the cool stones, and munched on his pumpkin pie. Having finished, he stood up and stretched, then turned toward the well.

He lowered the bucket slowly, letting the long rope play out of his hands foot by foot, and soon the bucket had disappeared into the blackness. Simon lowered it still more, ears perked for the pleasant sound of the splash as the bucket struck water. A clunk rose from the well instead, as the bucket hit something. A second later it was followed by a wild scream of pain. "Why doncha watch what you're doin', you idiot," yelled a deep gruff voice from the depths. Simon shook uncontrollably with fear. He tightened his grip on the rope, and began to haul up for all he was worth, his mouth hanging open and sweat dripping from his forehead. Surprisingly, it took all his strength, as the bucket was strangely heavy. The bucket finally rose from the well's darkness, and sitting serenely in it was a fine gentleman, dressed in top hat and tails. Simon's eyes bulged wildly from their sockets. He used his last remaining strength to haul the strange apparition to the top, then sank to the ground exhausted.

The gentleman hopped up and out of the bucket and tied it securely. He then dusted off his top hat and poked Simon with the ivory cane he carried under his arm. Simon sat up, shaking, eyes averted. The man spoke in a high thin voice, with a strong British accent. "What an arduous task that was! One hundred and fifty years, I'll say. And thank God for you, old boy, or I might have been down there a hundred and fifty more. Ah well, it really wasn't as bad as all that, and I guess someone has to do it. Now it's you, old man. Here, you'll need this," and he handed Simon his cane. "Look, old chap, don't look so puzzled," said the Britisher." Someone's got to do it and now you're it. After all, it's really quite important, you know. Keeps a lot of people in business. Makes life interesting. More important than that, it forces people to have the faith they need to get along in the world. I got pretty good at it after I got over the initial shock. It gets to be a kind of game, really, and after a while you don't mind, or perhaps don't care, what you're doing any more. Quite an experience, really. There's no use to think about it; you have no choice. In you go, old boy."

"In where?" stammered Simon, who would have liked to run but was too dumbfounded to move.

"In the bucket, of course" said the man in the top hat and tails. "Don't worry about the trip down. Nothing bad can happen until you reach bottom."

Simon thought a bit. "At least it's honest work," he said as he walked slowly towards the well. The stranger held the rope as Simon climbed resignedly into the bucket. The man in the top hat and tails then said, "Hold tight to the cane" and began to lower away. In a few seconds he yelled "Tallyho" as he let go of the rope. This good gentleman then turned and walked merrily away across the meadow.

As he was falling, Simon watched the cane in his hands slowly turn into a long red pitchfork.

Out in God's World

Swiftly and cleanly, the bow slices
The serene water, and ripples form
A gentle wake
As the gleaming paddles rhythmically
Urge the sturdy, slender craft
Onward.

Growing to meet the water's edge
Is a dense forest
Providing a curtain for
The little creatures
Who watch our progress.

The air is alive
With noises of the wild.
Chirping, twittering birds
Fly overhead.
A frog plops hurriedly
Under the safety of his lily pad
As his sensitive ears detect the splash
Of tiny droplets of water falling
From the tip of my paddle.

The sun is lazily journeying
To the other side of the world.
Chattering birds have been silenced now
As the inevitable darkness
Seeks to surround us.
Piercing the air are only
Tattling katy-dids and
Softly screeching owls.

The moon peeps curiously through
The green curtain of leaves
As though he were
Trying to be with us around
A fire, sparkling and warm.

The earth is crisp and cool
And the pungent smell of burning cedar Envelops me.
I am out in God's world . . .
I am at peace.

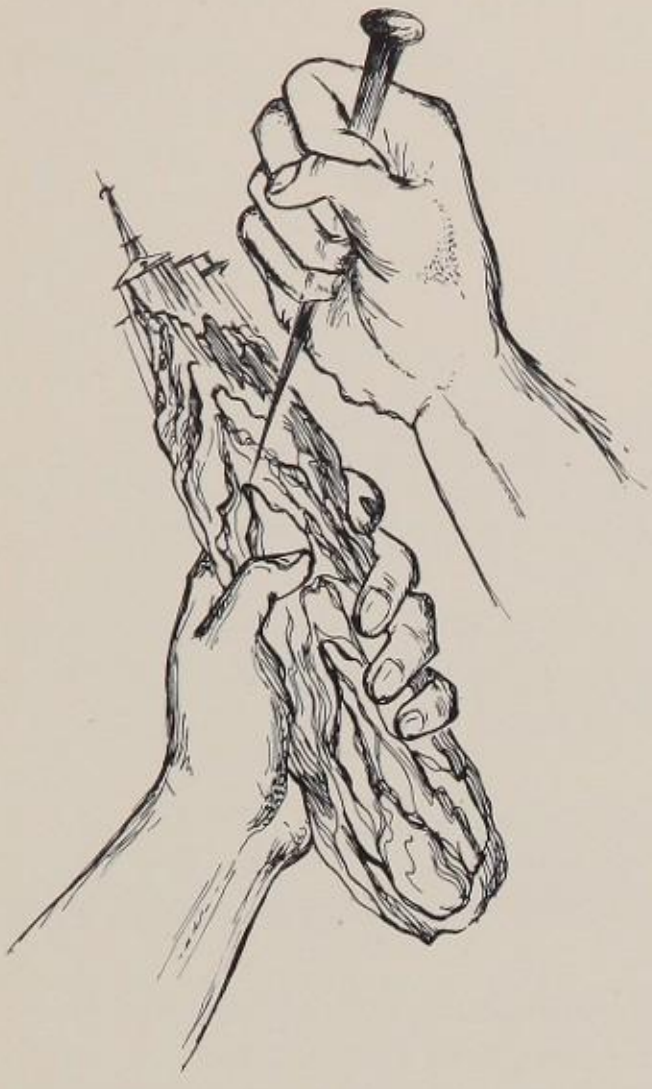
Blind Girl's Framework of Happiness



I walk the mountains, plains, and valleys
With the heavens above me,
The world about me
And the Unknown before me.

I care not what is behind me.
What is before me
Makes me go on—
Intrigues,
Exalts,
Depresses,
Inflames,
Quenches,
Kindles again.

I can hear the song of the earth,
I can smell the scent of the bloom,
I can taste the fruit of the vine,
I can touch the lips of my love;
But I cannot see him in his beauty,
Nor the earth that sings,
Nor the flower that smells,
Nor the fruit I taste.

I can dance through meadow and hill,
I can run to my love when he calls,
I can jump high when I'm happy,
I can sing sadly when I lament.
I need no more of life.
I cannot see,
But no one can see ahead.

There were always trees in that strip of park:
She could not remember when they had not
Been there, sober and inglorious giants.
She was very old now and had taken,
Of late, to sitting before the window,
To gape at them with her glazed, stupid eyes,
Awfully without tears of joy or hatred.

Somehow she felt there always would be trees,
Like soundless camels on the horizon,
Swaying by in fantastic silhouettes
With burdens, grotesque and vividly real.
Nightly the moon would come atop the trees,
Cold and malignant, save when it would rain
And woeful winds would make articulate
The inevitable, immortal trees,
And the noisome, darkened roadway stretching
Before her seemed to grow longer and more dreary:
Only the rare blossoming
Of joyous flower was transitory.

The men march in perfect files
Like mechanical toys, guns at the ready,
With a strange fire in their eyes.

Trundling tank treads grip the ground,
Driving forward the men and guns
Trapped in their sheaths of metal.

The great blue of sea and sky
Is streaked with dull gray steel
And the white wakes of sea and smoke.

Once more the earth men prepare

The bearded men fought each other silently, knowingly,
For generations, until they died.
And their foolish children danced in ritual around their graves,
And dug up the bodies and changed them and buried them again.

Then the children fought each other with a great din,
And loud curses, and the earth trembled.
The children soon grew strong, and fought harder,
Until the earth split in two at their fighting:

Each half whirling the grave of a bearded man into the eternity of the universe.
May eternity bring them peace, poor bearded men.

THE HIGH SCHOOL

Illustrated by STEPHANIE DARLOW

Author's Note: This story was not written with humorous intent. It is pure fiction today, but it will surely happen—history invariably repeats itself.

We have interpreted our ancestors through myriads of tiny clues. Primitive man is thus stereotyped as a brutish individual, inhabiting a smoky cave, who occupied himself by dragging his equally brutish mate by the hair through the primordial underbrush. Perhaps we have assumed too much. If our civilization were to crumble today, what would an archaeologist of the future conclude about us? Suppose he were to excavate a building like ours. . . .

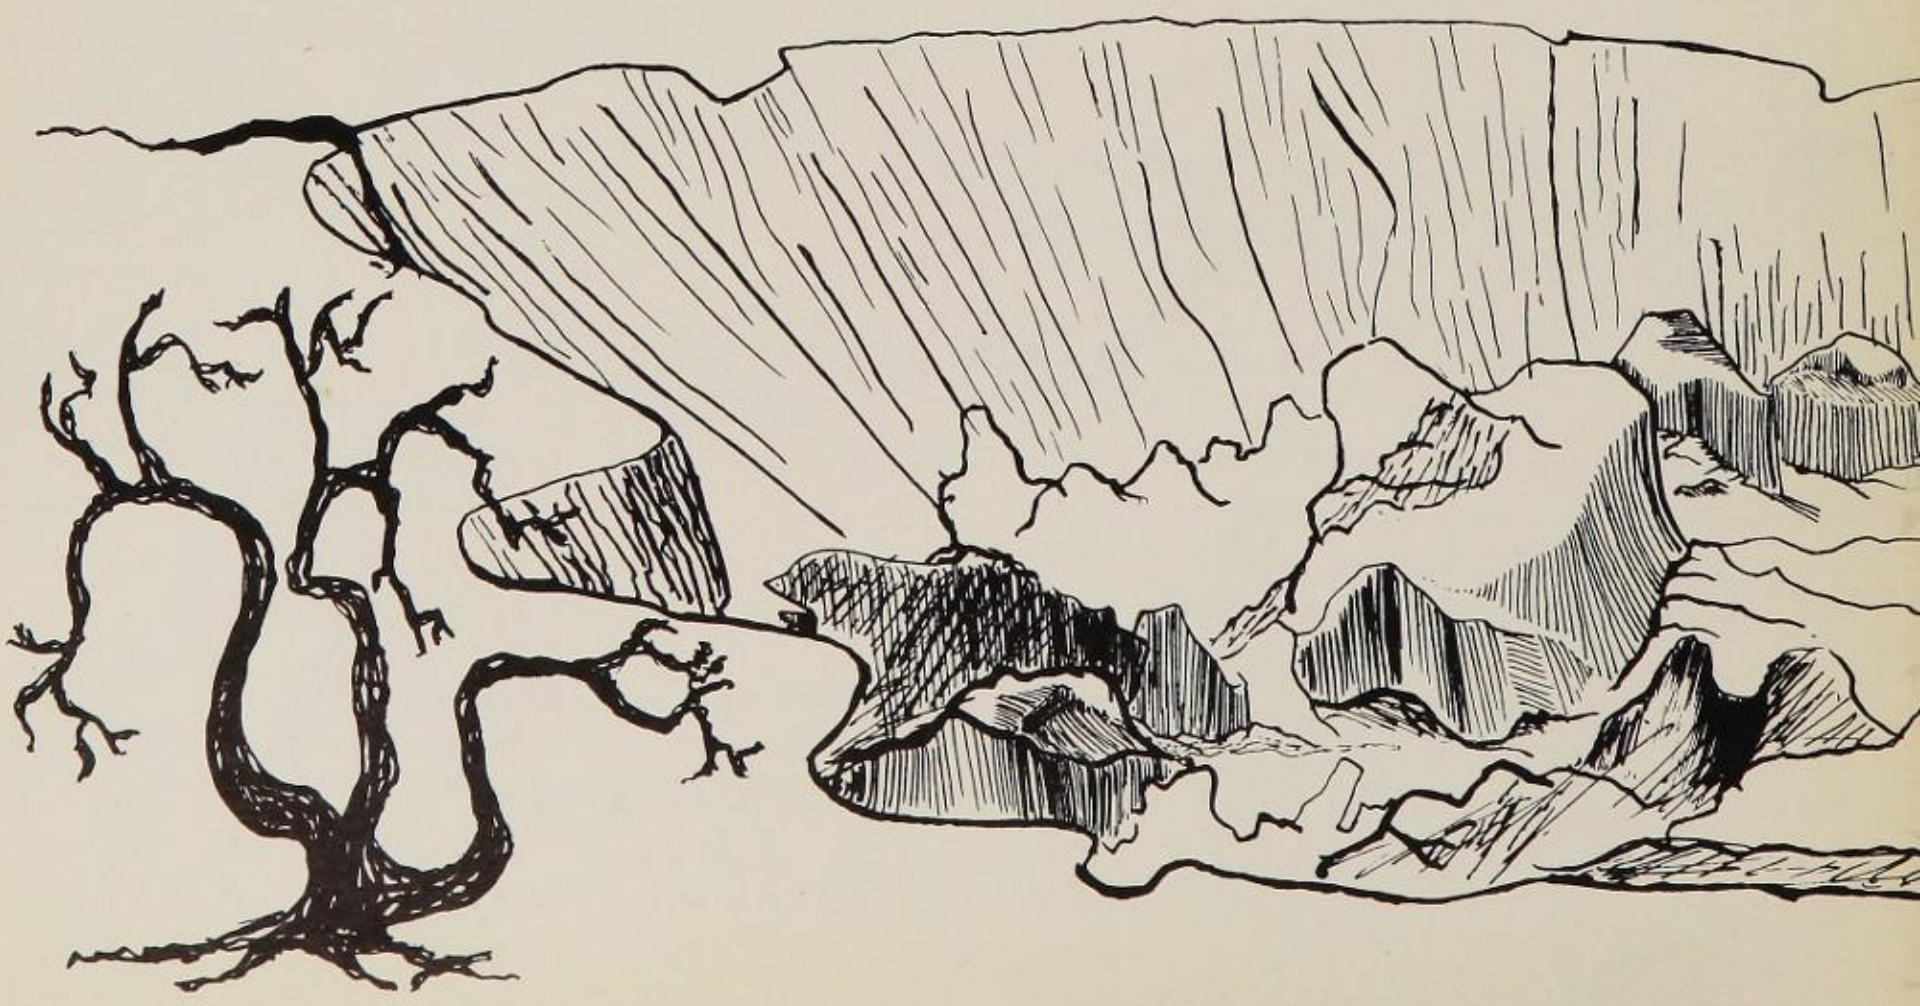
THE HIGH SCHOOL

Od scratched his head, which did not differ much from those of his struggling workers except that it may have been a darker blue. Peeking from behind a cloud, the hot sun mocked him, but his curses did not mitigate its effect. He sensed the proximity of a great discovery, yet all he could do was turn the pages of Homer's Iliad aimlessly, wishing someone would hold it for him while he read.

Od was a typical archaeologist. Being a reticent and sensitive scholar did not preclude an ardent desire for great fame. Perhaps a blood-stained weapon or an ancient sacrificial stone lay disintegrating beneath his feet! Unlimited material for a new book. . . .

While he was engaged in scratching his bluish skull and muttering his vehement curses on this expedition, one of the workers scrambled up the hill. Od could feel the tiny tentacles near his ears rise as the breathless laborer began to speak. "The top of a temple has been uncovered, oh magnif . . . Wow!"

With the speed of a vacation-bound schoolboy, Od followed the path of his exhausted informant until he discerned a group of workers peering down on what must have been the find. Before the sound of his feet had reached their ears, he was already pushing the workmen back. He riveted his eyes on the prize as a desert wanderer looks at a mirage. "At last," he breathed.



A stone representation of some antiquated bird standing upon a simple base was visible. An arrow protruded from the decayed base. He examined the arrow with excited fingers and found it mobile, though very rusty. He would simply dig deeper tomorrow and expose the whole temple.

That evening Od wrote in his diary:

April 7, 4958

Today at two o'clock we uncovered the dome of an ancient temple, belonging to those people who existed between the Very Ancients and Us. On the top we found a statue of a ROOSTER (an extinct bird says Baron's "How to Prepare for Unexpected Discoveries"). This is evidently one of their gods. It was set upon a base where an arrow had been placed to signify the extent of the bird's worshippers—from East to West. Thus, I have unraveled the first of our ancestors' secrets. Only my modesty restrains me from even intimating the impact that this magnificent discovery will have on my civilization.

Ru, his friend, had been peering over Od's shoulder. "You are a genius, Od!" he said with conviction.

Od grinned at him, squinting his eyes as the wind carried the sand about him. He scratched his brains; he was a genius! "Tomorrow!" he soliloquized.

April 8, 4958

When I awoke this morning, the temple was uncovered. By a mere glance I can safely say that these people did not progress for two thousand years. Supporting the building are six Greek columns!

I have spent the day exploring this colossus and believe I can commit to paper an account of what I saw. I write this with confused mind and joyous heart; my hand quivers as though I were a frightened bridegroom!

I remember ascending the stairs and noting that each set of them possessed a glass bowl. Was it not reasonable to assume that the entering populace placed coins and other trinkets of religious value in these bowls? A towering, thin white pole caught my attention in front of the entrance, but in my haste to enter, I dismissed it as having no purport until I entered one of the small rooms on the first floor . . .

It was in one of these rooms that I discovered a trace of their art form. Sketched upon a black board in the room was a stick-like figure. Judging from this masterpiece, I place these people, culturally, in the Cro-Magnon stage. Incidentally, below this grotesque figure the s y m b o l s T-e-a-c-h-e-r had been scribbled. Why, the pattern of the lines and the proportion of the head to the body reminded me of Summerian hieroglyphics! I immediately connected this thin figure with the thin "pole" outside. The pole was, I realized then, a statue of another god; however, with the limbs missing—another Venus de Milo, I mused! This must have been a very undernourished race . . . .

By passing through the small corridor, I found it was relatively easy to reach a gigantic auditorium. I surmise it was here that the priests rested from their labor and joined in sport. On the stage stood two metallic sticks from which wires were connected with sockets in the wall—ghastly weapons! I concluded that something resembling the Latin gladatorial battles occurred on this stage thousands of years ago. To prove my dire conviction, I may mention seeing two green caskets on the floor at either side of the stage, into which a man could easily have been placed! However, I shall not dwell upon such grim thoughts . . . .

Suspended from the ceiling were magnificent glass embellishments. From these vantage points one could secure a better view of the proceedings; I calculate, therefore, that these seats were reserved for royalty only . . . .

April 9, 4958

Today I chanced on four exciting discoveries! After deciding to begin explorations on the lowest level, I stumbled over our ancestors' secret place of Purgatory. Inside a formerly concealed room was a bath of great size (in which a ship may have floated). It was in this bath that they had attempted to wash away their sins; the water was very dirty.

On the same floor I disclosed our ancestors' only contribution to science. It was in a room strewn with newspapers that I espied a forbidding little black machine. It possessed a board of keys and a roller which could be moved back and forth. When the roller was moved to its extreme, ingeniously enough, a chime was emitted. This, then, was used as an alarm. It now occurs to me that it was a rather clumsy machine for the mere task of ringing a bell . . . .

Climbing the stairs again, I located a small prison. Part of a room on the first floor was separated by bars. This, strangely enough, has provided the first clue to their language. The symbols "G.O." mean "prison." I am making fine progress.

I managed to drag my exhausted body to the third floor. I entered a large chamber where bottles of colored liquids and smelly powders had been stored. This food was the source of their existence and more likely, the source of their thinness. When I mixed two liquids, they exploded!

This exploring and stair climbing had a weakening effect on me. Although I have come to distrust their inventive genius, their physical endurance must have been prodigious. However, I wonder at their making no attempt to construct some sort of elevator . . . .

April 10, 4958

I feel there is no reason for me to continue further explorations. I am rather embarrassed to have these creatures as my ancestors. I believe I shall leave today.

I am very fond of the aesthetic in life; perhaps this is why I found these people so peculiar. In their library I discovered two plaster representations of these people which shocked me so that I fear I will be haunted by nightmares for a month. These men possessed tiny pink heads and many vestigial parts, a chin, for instance! I have discovered something which may have some bearing later, that their main domesticated animal was the B-E-A-V-E-R (again, some extinct animal).

Oh yes, one last thing. I am filching from this defunct world one piece of literature which seems to be rather abundant and is probably a history of these people. It is marked F-O-L-I-O 1958. I will attempt to construe its worth when I learn their language. Ho hum . . . .

TOWER TO HEAVEN

Illustrated by HENRY RUAS

A man, who was but a speck of dust in the world, stood on a great plain where there were trees and flowers and little animals, and arranged a pile of bricks. He noticed nothing as he piled brick upon brick and built his tower. Then he climbed upon a ladder that he had made and built his tower higher still. The wind began to blow and still he built. He climbed a tree which was hundreds of years old and very tall, and built and built, and his hands worked fervently and nervously on each brick.

As time went on, the wind blew and the sky darkened. Thunder roared above his head, and streaks of lightning gave his odd-looking tower a bluish, icy glow. The wind became stronger and stronger, and the tower began to sway. Still he toiled at his task. The sky became angry and the clouds sent down their wrath and it rained. A hurricane began, and still he built, while the rain beat down upon his face and the thunder roared in his ears. He wanted the storm to stop; it was beating him and his eyes were blinded by the brilliant streaks of light all around him. "Oh G-d, make it stop," he cried and then he realized what he had said and he realized that he believed. He felt ashamed and he was sorry. And still the storm roared on.

Then he fell. There was calm, and the Lord reigned supreme over all.

The shrill falcon-scream of the engines
Recedes,
Diminishes,
Dissipates into infinities of space.

Lighting the voids are the stars;
Fierce, unwinking,
Brilliant jewels,
Hung on the satin curtain of night.

The eastern crescent of the planet
Drips with blood,
And an ocean emerges from the somber dusks,
Gleaming turquoise and gold . . .

Sights no other man
Could know . . .
But I cannot linger;

Shout, shout your triumphant laughter, purify the air,

The waterfall churns its spirals of intense foams
and deepens its moods on barnacled lime,
effervescing with thunderous sound.
It stretches and writhes, caresses the shore,
corrodes and smoothes, filters and lades,
carries heterogeneous matter,
moves sand and rock.
Swell, flood, rot and destroy;
Etch, hew, transport and build,
O mighty cataract!

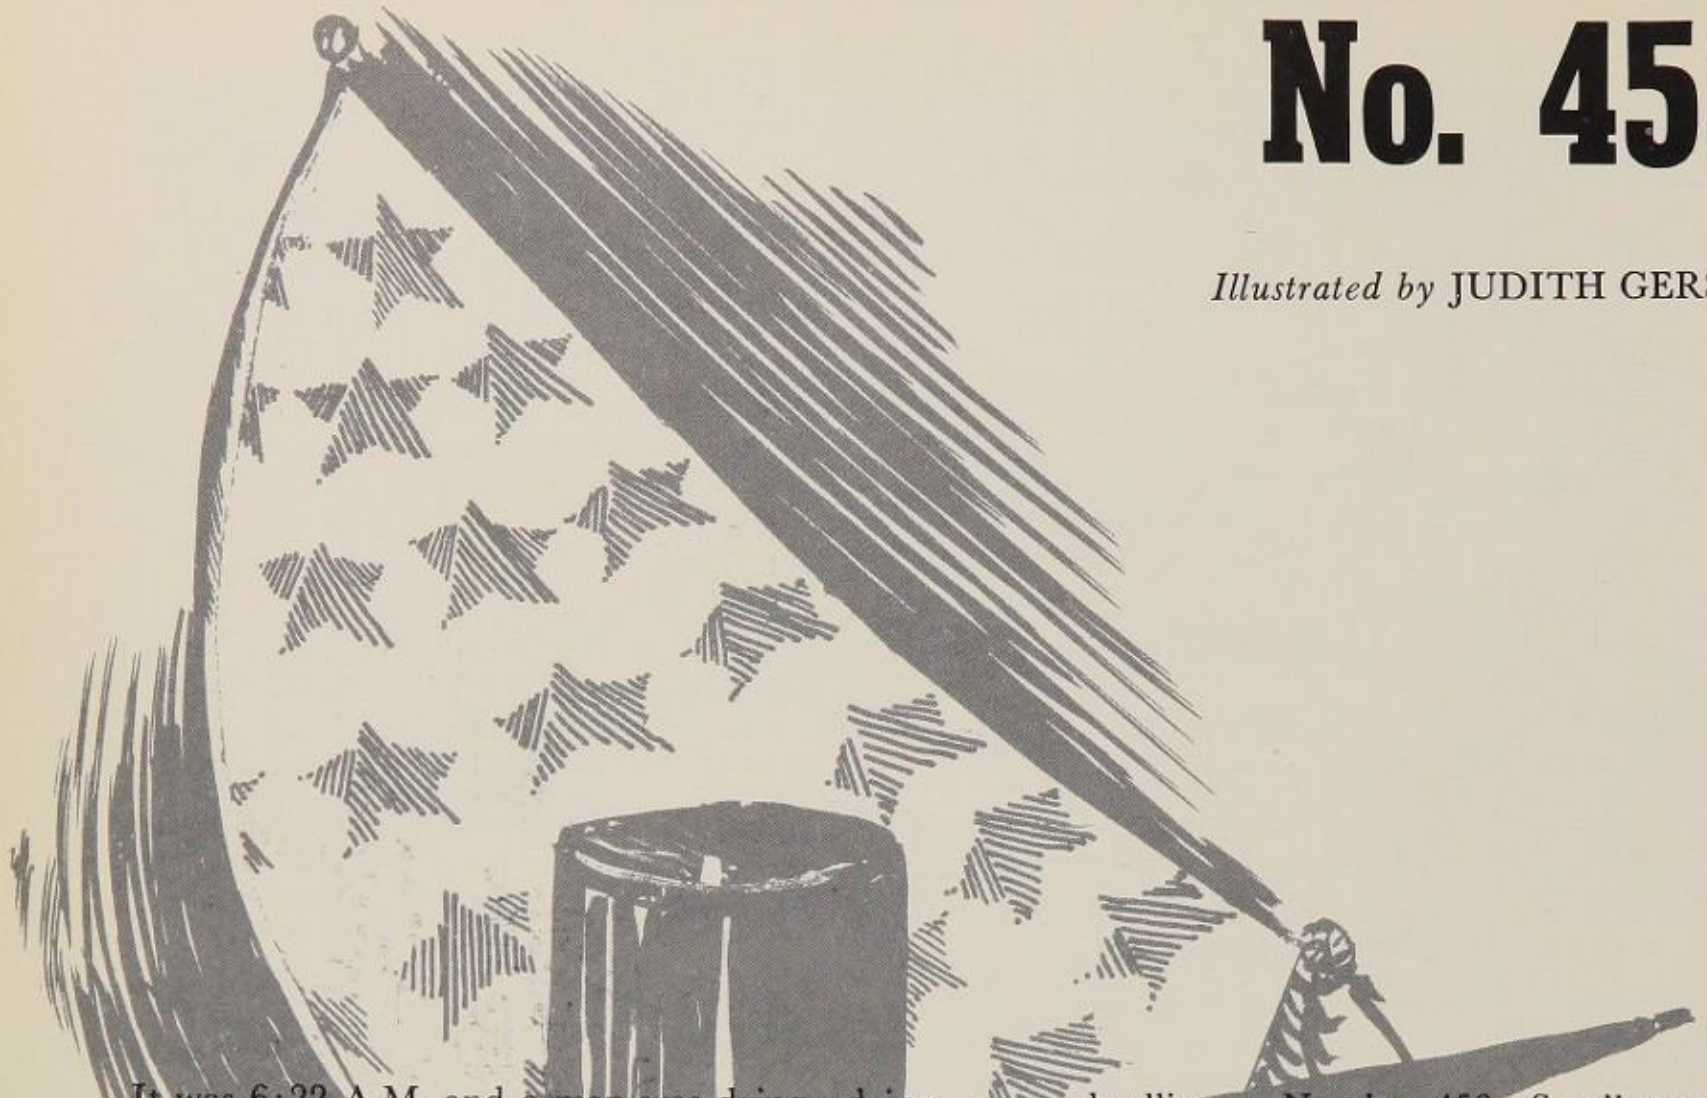
No. 453

Illustrated by JUDITH GERSTEN



It was 6:22 A.M. and a man was dying—dying in a back room of the Peterson house over on Tenth, between E and F Streets. His long, lean body was stretched grotesquely across a bed too small for its immense burden. In the flicker of the gas jets his features were calm and striking. The silence that prevailed was broken at intervals by short gasps, like the sighs of a weeping child. The small, overcrowded cubicle and hallway beyond were hushed hives of human activity. Mr. Stanton sat in a back room, writing what seemed to be an endless stream of dispatches and telegrams. Mr. Welles had gone for a walk in the early morning rain. Mary waited in a front parlor, refusing to believe that the end was but hours away.

Dr. Stone, the family physician, had said there was no hope. The other doctors concurred in their opinions—no hope. There was little anyone could do except wait. Dr. Charles Leale, in attendance since 10:30 p.m., continued to remove clots of blood from the wound, the one act that prolonged this living death. To expedite the removal of the clots, the dying man's head had been propped on several pillows. Dr. Leale attended his patient with devotion, refusing to leave the bedside. The pulse was weakening—count 44. His breath was now becoming shallow and more irregular. Life was ebbing away.

Outside, the dark, cloudy, damp night was fading into morning. Darkness was blending with light to produce the grey of the early hours. Mr. Welles walked through the rain towards the dwelling at Number 453. Small groups here and there had replaced the swarms of humanity that had gathered outside Peterson's the night before. Some questioned Welles, asking, "Is he going to live?" or "Lord, what will happen?"

Mr. Welles remarked to them, "He can live but a short time." Gideon turned and entered the house. He walked through a long hallway to the rear of the three-story building. The dwelling at Number 453 had been built a number of years before; its rooms were small and cheerless, and its passageways narrow and poorly lit.

It was nearing 7:00 A.M. as Gideon Welles entered the back room. Time was slipping its death knot around the scene. Surgeon General Barnes, who arrived during the night, had taken charge. Mary was there now, hoping, praying and still refusing to believe that the eternal struggle had begun. She was hysterical as Clara Harris helped her back to the front parlor. More than once during the night Mary cried out, "Live, you must live." With the little strength that remained, she sobbed, and was comforted by Miss Harris.

Mr. Stanton had ceased to dictate dispatches and was now standing at the head of the walnut bed. He looked around him at the walls papered in brown with a white print, at the washstand with its pitcher and bowl, across the room to the glass-paneled door and then at the bed. It was 7:22 and the man, whose body lay extended across the bed, ceased to live. He now "belonged to the ages."

The Endless Song

They tell me that I know not love;
To know is to be grown, they say.
And yet—so grown—in hat and glove—
I smile politely, act so gay,
Although I fear my soul is torn apart.

I am adult. I put on face
So others will not share my woe.
I smile when told the gaping space
Left in my life will fill up so
With happy love, I will not know my heart.

But now I sit and do not speak,
Still but a child to those who bow
And say: "You are so young . . . . It's sweet
Nonsense . . . . You can't yet feel; now
Wait a while." I nod and smile, then start

To feel the ache become a pain:
He did not care and now is gone.
I think I'll never laugh again . . .
But still smile at the endless song
Of youth and carefree days—a thing apart.

There was a little cutter
And you always heard him mutter
'Bout how the teachers treated him so bad.
There really was no doubt of it,
He just had to get out of it—
They all ganged up against him, the poor lad!

He came to school in dungarees
And stole the students' locker keys—
They sent him down to battle with the Dean.
The insults that he underwent
When, during tests, on cheating bent,
Hurt his poor ears (which weren't very clean).

You can't expect a guy to stay
If almost every single day
The faculty is so unfair and cruel.
Now he sits in the park alone
And often you can hear him moan
About the grave injustices of school.

Happy, carefree, sunlit days of youth;
Childhood passed by too quickly—
Sweet, bittersweet moments in the past,
I yearn for you.

Uncontainable mirth, joyful cries, salty tears;
Snowmen, curly-haired dolls, new rollerskates—
Innocence, joy, contentment,
I yearn for you.

Do I yearn for a shadow that never was,
A phantom illusion feeding on my discontent?
Was childhood happy, carefree, sunlit?
Was I ever innocent, joyful, content?

Away, you torturous, traitorous thoughts.
Why do you question my despairing soul?
Can you fathom what I actually yearn for—
Not childhood, but its keystone, love?

It is exquisite to behold:
Its lines rounded with simple grace,
The scroll curved with loving hands
And molded to fit upon its body.
The wood is aged and mellow.
It is rubbed to a glow
That seems to burn from within,
Polished to bring forth
The richest tones the wood can offer,
So deep, so pure.

The master dwells upon his finished work,
Heart filled with joy,
As he looks tenderly
Upon the wonder in his hands.
He raises it to his shoulder
And places the inanimate stick,
With horsehair pulled tight and rosined well,
Upon the strings
And seems to make this thing awaken
And swell with a song reaching
To the heavens.

How complete, how fulfilled he feels —
This man, this creator —
For he has fashioned
A singer of the Muse
With tones sweeter
Than any of nature's own:
He has made
The violin.

I mused through many passing hours
Of steepled heights and lofty towers,
Of gardens filled with fragrant flowers.

And then I looked up at the tree,
But it just smiled and asked of me,
"Where is your opportunity?"

I looked, but it was gone.

How to Build a Rocket...

Illustrated by SUSAN STEINBERG

There was once a time when anyone entering ————'s cellar Friday night was in grave danger of being punctured by a dart, the dart board being attached to the door. We didn't call it anything, but just came down once a week and had a fine time. Those were the good old days when we all kept ourselves busy with ping pong, darts and cards. If, between hands, we spoke of anything, it was usually something scientific, our common, if uncommon, interest being science. Over the course of months, our card table discussions ran the gamut of subjects from probability and the laws of chance (particularly as applied to the next hand), to rockets. When we got to rockets, however, we stayed there. No longer did anybody care whether $$C = \frac{4\,[H - (L+1)] - T}{52 - (2P+D)}$$ or not.

The club, now to be known as the Jamaica Rocket Society, spent a stormy session. It discussed everything from a giant firecracker to a rocket that would burn itself up with its fuel (something like cigarette paper). As the fuel burned, its weight would decrease so that as the last bit of fuel was consumed, what was left of the rocket would be going faster than anything on earth. Later we discovered that nothing would be left. We adjourned, quite sure that if our rocket missed hitting the moon, it would most certainly continue until it hit Mars.

Then came Sputnik. The next meeting, more frantic than those preceding, initiated a crash program which catapulted our craft into the planning stage. Consulting authoritative works ranging from those of Willy Ley to Jules Verne, we decided that our rocket must be made from stainless steel. Stainless, since it is strong and heat-resistant, could contain our explosive fuel mixture fairly safely. The main problem was that of fabrication. The only stainless piping obtainable was a half dozen second hand sink traps and elbows. Our conception of the final product most strongly resembled a sea serpent, and the fear that this grotesque conglomeration of curves might, upon being launched, turn upon us, drove us to dispense with stainless steel. Replacing it were seven feet of straight brass pipe and many sandbags—for us, not the rocket.

The next point considered was the burst diaphragm, a device which confines the pressure until the right moment, then bursts, releasing the thrust. Where in the tail should the diaphargm be placed? What should it be made of? Wouldn't a well-rammed cork be cheaper? These and many other highly technical questions were settled by the time the Society adjourned, or, to be more accurate, disintegrated for the week. It must be noted, however, that the sudden dispersal testified to the excellency of our fuel. An impromptu experiment had shaken the house and filled the basement with fumes. The meeting's result was the decision to launch the thing from the most deserted beach on Great South Bay and, since the diaphragm's bursting strength ought to be ever so little less than the rocket itself, to add a few more sandbags to our bunker.

Then in a move that surprised everyone, most of all us, we built it. Two inches thick, seven feet of chrome-plated brass gleamed beneath the street light. It was a dead ringer for a bus pole and as soon as we boarded the bus with our rocket, things began to happen. Several passengers lunged for the "post" as the bus accelerated. We informed them amid much mirth that this was a rocket, not a bus post, much to their annoyance. The bus rounded a corner and everyone leaned still more heavily, practically upsetting the slender pipe. We reasserted ourselves more strongly and by way of reply, a nasty old fellow informed us and the rest of the bus that we ruffians were ruining the nation's future. Then it toppled, and with it its quota of straphangers. Now everyone would believe it was a rocket and leave us alone. Unfortunately, it didn't work out that way. The driver, who had neither the facts nor a sense of humor, saw that we walked home. This we did, concealing our rocket as best we could under our jackets and promising each other to be present at the launching.

Then, finally the big day came. We took a few pictures, set up the launching rack and said a few appropriate farewells to our handiwork, then retired to our stations. The camera started rolling. The launching crew crowded behind the sandbags, periscopes cautiously peeping over like snails' eyes. Someone must have pushed the button, for suddenly a small tongue of flame emerged tentatively from the rocket's tail. Within the next instant, the shiny pipe was enveloped in black smoke and then, with a mighty roar, the red nose cone flashed skyward. That was all; just the nose cone. For the next week or so, everything was in turn blamed: the builders, the designers, a burst diaphragm that didn't burst, a combustion chamber bulkhead that did. The following Friday, the Rocket Society assembled, as usual, for its weekly meeting. The nose cone, having successfully descended from the height of a hundred feet to which it had been shot, was tastefully mounted and exhibited. Then, with slight misgivings lest some future bather, stumbling across our poor, deserted project might touch off further Russian rocket scares, we resumed our former order of business—ping pong, bridge, darts.

RICHARD BURGER

Farewell to a Building

Illustrated by JUDITH GERSTEN

It is doubtful whether any geographical spot on the map holds the magic of Brooklyn, U.S.A. Any TV contestant knows that to put the audience immediately on his side, he has only to mention that he hails from Brooklyn.

A careful study of this phenomenon would probably show that Brooklyn's magic heritage is centered in one building. Strangely enough, it is not Borough Hall. It has nothing to do with Brooklyn's famous Navy Yard. In fact, for years it seemed to many people more important than these structures. It is a building which, if buildings could talk, would probably have the most memories. I am speaking of one of the nation's leading homes of tradition and bad hot dogs, Ebbets Field.

But if I am correct in this theory, by 1961 the name of Brooklyn will no longer have the impact it once did. For, alas, the Dodgers are moving, and Ebbets Field must make way for apartments.

But if those old blocks of concrete could talk, what stories they could relate.

For one, take the 1920 World Series when, with an apparent rally in the making, the Dodgers got three men on base. The only trouble was that they were all on the same base. This unusual chain of events led to the only unassisted triple play in World Series history and earned for the Dodgers the title of "Daffiness Boys."

Following in this great tradition of buffoonery, the fans surpassed the team.

Back in the 1920's when someone at Ebbets Field yelled "Kill the Umpire," a huge man named Frank Germano tried his best to oblige. Onto the field he raced and took mad swings at umpire George Magerkurth. Of course, the two were pried loose, but until they were, the umpire's life was not a sure thing.

Later there was Jack Pierce. He is fondly remembered because each game that Dodger third baseman Cookie Lavagetto played in, Jack heralded Cookie's presence with his piercing tones and a helium-filled balloon which said on it in bold type "Cookeeeeeee."

Of course this story would not be complete without mention of the Dodger Sym-phony. Here was an organization that lasted until the end although once completely banished from baseball by the commissioner himself for dancing on the Dodger dugout during a World Series game.

Not to be outdone by the fans, the players upheld the tradition by dropping a third strike that almost (but not quite) won a World Series; and by ending a potentially great career by crashing into the centerfield wall twice; and by many other assorted antics.

But only in Brooklyn could the ballpark itself get into the act. For on opening day not only were the keys to open the park missing, but the trouble was just starting. Flag-raising ceremonies were also delayed because nobody remembered to bring the flag. Except for the omission by the builder of a pressbox, all went well, and continued to do so.

Brooklyn also holds the distinction of having on record the only baseball game postponed because of gnats.

So although the Dodgers may move and Ebbets Field come down, you can't take away memories. Although not physically existing, Ebbets Field will live on for years to come.
